Soviet Fliers Forced Down In Wilds Of Canada

One Reported Hurt, Plane Is Damaged Landing on Island In New Brunswick

Canadian Press.

Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, April 28.—The Soviet plane en route from Moscow to New York is down on Miscou Island, New Brunswick, it was reported here tonight.

The two Russian airmen—Pilot General Vladimir Kokkinaki and his radio operator-navigator, Maj. Mikhail Gordienko—made a forced landing tonight.

The island is at the northeastern tip of New Brunswick, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence at the mouth of Bay Chaleur.

One of the men was said to have been injured, but his identity could not be learned as neither of the men spoke English.

The other flyer was unhurt.

Ship Damaged

The ship was said to have been badly damaged in the landing, in a marsh, shortly after 9 p. m. (8 p. m. Eastern standard time).

Residents of the island said the airmen circled before landing and the motors appeared to be functioning poorly.

A telegraph operator at Shippigan, on the mainland 25 miles from the island, was the first to report the landing. Lawrence Vibert, an island resident, telephoned he had been out to the scene, saw the wrecked, twin-motored red monoplane and tried to talk—unsuccessfully because of the language difficulty—with the airmen.

Stick By Their Ship

Vibert took food to the two men, who remained by their ship to keep islanders from approaching too closely.

The Ottawa government icebreaker Montcalm was ordered from Charlottetown Harbor to go to their aid.

The Moskva is a twin-motored monoplane, painted red, with white markings, designed for flight in the sub-stratosphere in accordance with Kokkinaki's belief that nonstop world-girdling planes of the future will fly at tremendous speed in rarified air.

On the present flight, Kokkinaki reported, in messages sent by Gordienko, that their speed went at times as high as 250 miles an hour, due to altitude and a following wind.

By International News Service.

Floyd Bennett Field, N. Y., April 28.—Although Soviet Charge d'Affaires Constantine Oumansky asked over the air at 7 p. m. that the Moscow-New York non-stop fliers radio their position, no word had been received from them at 8 p. m. (E.S.T.).

At 7 o'clock Oumansky broadcast instructions for the fliers to land elsewhere "if the weather is closing in." No direct word had come from the fliers—Col. Kokkinaki and Maj. Gordienko—since 2:58 p. m.

Oumansky went on the air over radio station WOR of Newark, N. J., and advised the Russian nonstop fliers to land at Bangor, Me., or Boston "if the weather is closing in."

At that hour a heavy fog and little or "zero" ceiling extended to

2½-Hour Procession of 50 Drum Corps, 93 Floats and Thousands of Marchers Highlights End of Annual Fete

Winchester, Va., April 28.—A two-and-a-half-hour blaring parade of 93 floats, 50 drum and bugle corps and bands and thousands of uniformed marchers came up Picadilly street and swung down Main street here today while an estimated 90,000 visitors jammed the historic curbsides in the close of the sixteenth annual Apple Blossom Festival.

The shivering throng cheered vivacious Genevieve Garner, brown-eyed and soft-spoken Texan, as she led the triumphal parade over a 4-mile route to climax her reign as Queen Shenandoah XVI.

Standing at her side were uniformed guards, while at the front of the float were maids of honor Misses Shirley Williams and Allison Cooper in white dresses. Children who served as train and crown bear-

Warring Gang Chief Enters Plea of Guilty

Action May Lead to Final Disposition of Tax Conspiracy Case

Emmitt Warring, abdicated numbers king serving 26 months for jury tampering, pleaded guilty yesterday of criminal conspiracy. He faced a $10,000 fine and 4 to 24 months more in jail.

Warring admitted plotting with his brothers to defraud the Treasury of income taxes on his gang's profits. He withdrew his plea of not guilty as the Government neared the close of presentation of its evidence against him. The trial had been marked by negotiations to settle the Treasury's civil claim of $28,000.

Sentence Likely Monday

Justice Laws remanded Warring to jail until Monday, when he probably will pronounce sentence. There were indications this would pave the way for final disposition of the whole Warring case, which has revealed new sensations at intervals for nearly a year and brought the Warring gang from control of a $2,000,000-a-year racket to what are reported to be straitened circumstances.

Conspiracy charges still are pending against Leo Paul Warring, Charles (Rags) Warring, and Gordon L. R. Sadur, income tax expert for the organization.

3,000 Applaud Indian Dances At Folk Festival

Cherokee Youngsters Take Spotlight With Their Shuffling Steps

Youth and age shared the spotlight yesterday at the National Folk Festival and won enthusiastic applause from an audience of more than 3,000 packed into Constitution Hall.

A high spot of the program, especially for the hundreds of school children who attended the matinee, was the group of Cherokee Indian youngsters from the Great Smoky Mountains of North Carolina, who proved that the paleface has no monopoly on the square dance.

Obeying the familiar "Do Se Do" and "Circle All" as called by youthful Abraham Walkingstick, the Cherokees swung each other through the figures with a skill bred by generations of tribal dancers.

Traditional Dances

The dances they did were the traditional ones they have learned from close association with white men. But the quick shuffling movements and the faintly primitive rhythm of the steps could be achieved only by Indians. The children threw themselves into the dances with the same abandon as that shown by the Kiowa braves who performed their tribal war dance at the start of the program.

Roosevelts Treat Royal Couple To 'Country Family Dinner'

Hyde Park, N. Y., April 28 (AP).—Oxford-educated Crown Prince Olaf and comely Princess Martha, of Norway, cast off royal formality tonight as they sat down to a "country family dinner" that began a two-night visit to the home of President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

The President's mother, Mrs. Sara Delano Roosevelt, other relatives and neighbors were at the dinner, as well as aides of the smiling royal couple, who debarked a few hours before from the Presidential yacht Potomac on a dreary lumber dock at nearby Poughkeepsie.

A Vassar College choir sang after the carefree feast. The prince and princess expressed delight over plans for an old-fashioned Roosevelt picnic at which they will be entertained tomorrow by Norwegian singers and dancers from the New York World's Fair.

The royal couple arrived at 4:30 p. m. on the Potomac, which was escorted from New York by three Coast Guard boats.

The full honors accorded the head of a state, including the shrill of a boatswain's pipe, accompanied their debarkation into a roped enclosure.

The President and Mrs. Roosevelt, in light blue homespun suit with a navy blue beret, stood beside their car and welcomed their guests with warm handshakes.

Committee Votes to Fix 1% Age Tax

House Ways, Means Group Would Freeze Levy for 3 Years; to Study Other Changes

By Robert C. Albright.

The House Ways and Means Committee yesterday voted unanimously to freeze the 1 per cent social security pay roll tax for old-age insurance at the same rate for three years.

Designed as a recovery stimulant, the action abandons increases of one-half of 1 per cent annually in taxes on employers and workers. It would ease the tax burden on this group $275,000,000 annually, or $825,000,000 for the three-year period.

In announcing the vote, Chairman Robert L. Doughton of the Ways and Means Committee indicated this may be the first of a series of steps considered by Congress to remove business "deterrents" from the tax structure.

Tax Revision Slated

Although no Congressional action has been taken on proposals to revise the existing corporate tax structure, Doughton said tax revision has not been dropped and would be considered by the committee shortly after action has been completed on social security act amendments.

"If there are real deterrents in the tax structure that can be removed or reduced without decreasing the total amount of revenue received by the Government, we are going to consider them," he told repotters.

"We all realize, of course, that we cannot cut taxes at this time but we will be only too glad to deal with it, to show our good faith, anyway."

Action Final, Says Doughton

Abandonment of the automatic step-ups in social security taxes had been actively urged by business groups, and this was one of three alternative proposals for easing the business tax burden put forward by the Treasury.

Under present law, social security pay roll taxes for unemployment insurance would increase from 1 per cent on employers and 1 per cent on workers to 1½ per cent on each, beginning January 1, 1940.

"The action of the Ways and Means Committee freezes the present rate for three more years," Doughton told reporters.

"There has been a great deal of complaint about the social security tax from business people and this ought to be pleasing to those who

Boy Leaps 30 Feet to Escape A Nightmare

Clarence Robertson, 14, had a nightmare early yesterday and to escape "something that was closing in on me" jumped 30 feet from his bedroom window to a neighbor's yard.

Clarence, who lives at 1242 Twenty-ninth street northwest, escaped with only brush burns to his legs and arms.

He climbed a wall 6 feet high and ran to the home of a friend.

"Then I felt sort of silly and scared," he said.

Officials See Snub in Way Of Reply

Diplomatic Usage Violated; Gloomy Disappointment at Tone Is General

By William V. Nessly.

Gloomy disappointment in official circles here over the tenor of Chancellor Hitler's Reichstag address last night was shaded with resentment when word was received from the German foreign office that Hitler will send no reply to President Roosevelt's peace appeal, the occasion for the German dictator's address.

Disregarding the dictates of diplomatic manners, Hitler will let his public address constituent his answer, it was said, despite the fact that the President's appeal was made in a personal message to the dictator, transmitted privately to Berlin some 13 hours before the public here learned of it.

Disappointment over the tone of the speech itself continued as officials continued into the evening hours their study of the translated text.

No "Doors" Found Here

While President Roosevelt, at Hyde Park, was understood by some bystanders to have made a reference, after casual mention of the Hitler talk, to the door having been left open "an inch," others standing nearby as the President conversed with Crown Princess Martha of Norway, disputed the report.

Here, officials said, at about the same time, that the text was being carefully scrutinized to see if any doors for further action had been left open, but none had been found up to the time the comment was made.

Comment Withheld

Administration officials, including those of the State Department, would make no comment pending complete scrutiny of the text, but on Capitol Hill there was a fresh outburst of denunciation of the German dictator.

A few members of Congress saw some hope for continued peace in the Hitler declarations, but they clearly were outnumbered by those who used such terms as "sinister," "intemperate" and "blustering" in discussing the address.

While Secretary of State Hull and some of his aides were scanning carefully and then forwarding to President Roosevelt at Hyde Park available information on the speech as it came in, Senator Borah, veteran Foreign Relations Committee member, said it appeared to him that Hitler himself looked upon the

De Valera Warns Britain Against Drafting Irish

London, April 28 (INS).—Prime Minister Eamon De Valera of Eire in a message to Prime Minister Chamberlain tonight warned Britain against attempting to conscript Irishmen.

He served notice on the premier that application of conscription to the Eire-sympathizing minorities in northern Ireland would be likely to result in a revolt.

De Valera's message protested particularly against the possibility that the British might try to draft into the army Irishmen who live and work temporarily in England, Scotland and Wales.

Mrs. Lindbergh and 2 Sons Speed to Her Jersey Home

By International News Service.

New York, April 28.—Two small American boys with no memories of their homeland sailed into New York Harbor today with their pretty mother, Anne Morrow Lindbergh.

For Jon and Land Lindbergh, sons of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, there were no excited reunions with adoring relatives on the pier. Instead, 60 husky New York police formed a silent, hollow square about them as they were hurried off the French liner Champlain shortly after 7 o'clock this morning. Only a uniformed chauffeur waited in the limousine that whisked them away.

With their pale, composed mother and their nurse, the little boys were sped to Englewood, N. J., to the arms of their grandmother, Mrs. Dwight Morrow.

There, behind the closely guarded walls of the Morrow country home, Jon, who is going on 7, and Land, who will soon be 2, got the welcome they missed at the pier. But their father, recently called to active service in the army, was not visible among those on hand to welcome them.

Thus for the first time in four and a half years Col. Lindbergh, his wife and family are in the country from which they fled as voluntary exiles in December, 1935.

The Story in Brief

Associated Press Radiophoto.

ADOLF HITLER
Pounds on his chest before the Reichstag.

Adolf Hitler—

REJECTED, sarcastically, President Roosevelt's peace plan.

PROCLAIMED a German Central European Monroe Doctrine.

ABROGATED a naval treaty with England and a non-aggression treaty with Poland.

DEMANDED return by England of pre-war colonies, and by Poland of Danzig and a road through the corridor.

INDICATED a willingness to discuss disarmament if proposals were not directed first toward Nazi Germany.

ASKED the President to make good Woodrow Wilson's pledges.

REPEATED that Germany had no designs on Alsace-Lorraine.

SPOKE softly of Russia and Japan; said little of Italy or Yugoslavia.

DENIED designs on the Americas or American territories; asked that barriers to free trade be removed, starting in the Americas.

SUGGESTED the President solve domestic problems before attempting to solve world problems.

Reaction Abroad—

LONDON—Indifferent to naval treaty abrogation. Held speech moderate but not removing tension. Saw difficulties in solution of Polish problem.

PARIS—Held speech an "embarrassed" defensive, and moderate. Some relief in offer to sell arms and munitions believed taken from Czechs.

ROME—Preparing for closer Italian-German military co-operation, evidently expecting action.

WARSAW—Held speech not "warlike" but said Poland was ready to reply in kind to any attempt to force solution of difficulties.

Reaction Here—

HYDE PARK—The President slept through the address. No comment for publication.

CAPITOL HILL—Generally pessimistic. Some called speech "intemperate," "sinister" or "blustering." "Specious and unpromising," Speaker Bankhead called it.

ISOLATIONISTS—Leaders such as Senator Borah held Hitler himself regarding his speech as "ending the matter of further world peace discussions." Senator Nye was glad it wasn't a "hateful" speech.

Demands Special Corridor Rights And Colonies

Jibes at U. S. Draw Special Applause; Diplomats Interpret Speech to Mean War Is Not in Immediate Offing, but Fear Quickened Contest for Balance of Power

By International News Service.

Berlin, April 28.—Chancellor Adolf Hitler opened a new chapter in world history today with a stinging rejection of President Roosevelt's peace plan and the proclamation of a German Monroe Doctrine over central Europe.

The "Nazi Caesar," in a challenging speech before the Reichstag, also tore up the ten-year nonaggression treaty between Germany and Poland and the Anglo-German naval pact as his answer to the "encirclement" drive aimed at the Reich.

From Britain he bluntly demanded restoration of prewar colonies to Germany and from Poland the return of Danzig and concessions in the Polish Corridor.

As a result of the Reichsfuehrer's momentous address, which lasted 2 hours 17 minutes and touched upon nearly every outstanding problem in the Western and Eastern Hemispheres, Berlin's diplomatic circles tonight anticipated a quickening of the tempo in the international contest for balance of power.

But the conciliatory passages with which Hitler's speech was liberally sprinkled and its lack of any precipitate surprise gave grounds for the impression that no general war is in the immediate offing, provided the democratic powers do not move too far in their military alignment efforts.

Disavows Intent to Attack Americas

The German dictator's panoramic address, built around the nucleus of a sardonic reply to Mr. Roosevelt's peace message of April 14, sought to throw back onto the shoulders of the United States, Britain and France the responsibility for preservation of the peace and the blame for Europe's current tension.

Indeed, the Fuehrer even went so far as to suggest Mr. Roosevelt prove his peaceful intent by prevailing upon Britain to return colonies to Germany. Publicly addressing himself directly to the American President in disregard for diplomatic precedent, Hitler declared:

"I would appreciate it very much if you, Mr. Roosevelt, as the successor of (Woodrow) Wilson, devote yourself to the redemption of Wilson's promises on the basis of which Germany laid down its arms. Wilson solemnly pledged his word that German colonial claims would receive just examination."

His talk frequently interrupted by loud applause mingled with derisive laughter at certain jibes aimed at America, Hitler plainly let it be known he would never consent to Mr. Roosevelt's offer to act as an intermediary between the Rome-Berlin axis and other powers.

He refused Mr. Roosevelt's suggestion that nonaggression pledges be exchanged with 31 enumerated nations, but offered to give such pledges to any of the listed countries that might directly ask the Reich for them and give similar promises in return.

He rejected Mr. Roosevelt's proposal of world conference to limit armaments and redistribute economic opportunities, vowing:

"German negotiators will never again enter a conference without arms."

British, Polish Treaties Formally Canceled

Pointing to the fact that in his six and a half years of power he has never yet waged war, Hitler reiterated Germany's desire for peace. Specifically, if sarcastically, the Fuehrer gave assurances he had no intention of attacking "the United States itself and other states on the American continent."

He promised in effect to press no claims against France's Alsace-Lorraine, saying:

"The return of the Saar territory settled once and for all the territorial problems between France and Germany. It is most regrettable that the French statesmen have not considered this attitude as a fact."

Hitler's claim to exercise a European Monroe Doctrine was voiced in a retort to Mr. Roosevelt's suggestion that Germany and Italy make known their policies. The Fuehrer demanded to know what would transpire if Germany and Italy made a similar appeal to the United States. He said:

"In this case, Mr. Roosevelt would—rightfully, I admit—refer to the Monroe Doctrine and decline to comply with such a request as constituting interference in the internal affairs of the American continent.

"We Germans support a similar doctrine for Europe—above all for the territory and interests of the Greater German Reich."

Shortly after its delivery, a copy of the Fuehrer's historic address was handed to American Charge d'Affaires Raymond H. Geist for transmission to Washington as Hitler's official "reply to the well-known public message of President Roosevelt"—as the German foreign office put it.

It was also announced that memorandums formally denouncing the Anglo-German naval treaty, limiting Germany to 35 per cent of the British navy, and the German-Polish friendship pact, were handed to the British and Polish embassies respectively.

The memorandum addressed to London justified cancellation of the naval treaty on the grounds of the "altered mutual relationship" between Britain and the Reich. The communication to Warsaw declared:

"Due to the failure of previous negotiations, the present cancellation is found necessary."

Hitler's termination of the Anglo-German naval agreement was coupled with a spectacular offer to start all over again negotiations for a new understanding. To his 882 "heiling" deputies in the Kroll Opera House, the Fuehrer said:

"The voluntary restriction of German naval armaments was based on one conviction and only one—that war between England and Germany is never again possible. This wish, this conviction is alive in me today.

Lies 'Edging' U.S. Into War, Says Johnson

'False Propaganda' Assailed at Hearing On Neutrality Act

By the Associated Press.

While the Capital yesterday was analyzing Chancellor Hitler's address, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee continued hearings on proposed changes in the neutrality act, with Senator Johnson (Republican) of California, reiterating his contention that the United States was being "edged" into war by false propaganda.

Dr. Charles C. Tansill, professor of American history at Fordham University, the committee's witness, agreed and said it was "a repetition of the old theme song, 'Save the World for Democracy.'"

Opposes Increased Powers

Dr. Tansill expressed opposition to legislation giving the President increased discretion on neutrality questions. He proposed that the present neutrality law be continued, with its cash-and-carry provisions, due to expire May 1, re-enacted.

Before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, Dr. Harry F. Ward, of the American Congress for Peace and Democracy, called for an embargo on all war supplies, loans and credits to Germany, Italy and Japan, and economic sanctions against any nation which invades or attacks another.

Another witness, Dr. Esther Caukin Brunauer, of Washington, associate in international education of the American Association of University Women, said Hitler's statement that he had no thought of attacking any nation in the western hemisphere confirmed her interpretation because "the United States has a good strong Army and Navy and he knows it."

Gives "People's View"

Dr. Diana Monsman, of Baltimore, representing the Maryland division of the Keep America Out of War Congress, gave the committee her impressions of what the ordinary people think of neutrality.

"They are, as I see them," she said," very suspicious of all sorts of moral committments. They don't like the country to pick out the villain."

She said the people did not want the President, to talk us into war, Congress to legislate us into war, or any organization to cause us to want war.

Carnegie Honors Hurricane Hero Posthumously

Pittsburgh, April 28 (U.P.).—A heroic act in last September's New England hurricane and floods was recognized tonight by the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission which awarded 14 bronze medals for deeds of valor.

William P. McGrath, 30, unemployed, gave his life trying to save J. Gilbert Finning, 40, from drowning. Both men were pushing a rowboat at night when Finning lost his footing and drifted into deep water.

McGrath swam toward Finning, but both were sucked beneath huge waves and drowned. His mother, Elizabeth F. McGrath, of the Bronx, New York, was awarded a bronze medal and $500 for her son's heroism.

Also honored for rescues were:

Simon F. Misenberger, 66, Belvidere, N. J., for saving Robert W., 7, and Laurence Gleason, 9, from drowning when they broke through ice; William E. Murray, 59, Dunkirk, N. Y., for saving Mary L. Wroblewski, 23; and John E. Willefsky, 47, Waterbury, Conn., for rescuing Alfred T. Claudette, 20, at Torrington, Conn. Willefsky's right arm had to be amputated.

Another hero was Daniel M. Ivins, 30, school principal of Etowah, Tenn., who, with Mary Grayce Jarvis, 19, plunged over a 30-foot fall to rocks as he sought to prevent her from drifting over the fall. Both were injured but recovered.

Howard B. Allard, Jr., 17, of Lynnhaven, Va., also was honored. He rescued M. Lucille Spencer, 21, and her sister, Mattie S. Ricks, 27, from drowning at Chesapeake Bay, Va.

Ex-Employe Puts Unemployment Board in Quandary

The District Unemployment Compensation Board is wondering whether unemployment compensation, like charity, begins at home, since Joseph F. Donlan, former field examiner for the board, now unemployed, claimed compensation benefits based on his service with the board.

Denying an earlier appeal by Donlan, th eboard ruld he was subject to the civil service retirement act.

H. C. Holden, appeals examiner for the board, yesterday agreed to forward to the board Donlan's request for a special appeals tribunal, which would include employer and employe representatives.

International Law Society Here in 23d Convention

Some 200 members of the American Society of International Law are attending the society's twenty-third annual convention at the Carlton Hotel.

"Yes, this is an age of international lawlessness," Dr. James Brown Scott, president of the society, said yesterday, "nevertheless, we are here to reaffirm our faith in international law. We wouldn't give up hope for our laws against robbery and murder just because they were widely violated, would we?"

Highest combined rating in contests was made by Troop 231, of Rockville; second, by 211, and third, Troop 210, of Alta Vista. Inspection judges were Jack Carney and Gunnar Wardosick.

House Cut in Monopoly Committee Fund 'Perfectly Agreeable,' Sen. O'Mahoney Says

By the Associated Press.

Chairman O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, of the monopoly committee, said yesterday that Congressional action in reducing an appropriation for the committee from $600,000 to $120,000 was "perfectly agreeable" to him.

O'MAHONEY

The Senate had voted the larger amount, but the House reduced it, and the Senate followed suit yesterday.

O'Mahoney said he had agreed to the cut at the request of House members who felt that the appropriation should not be granted without committee hearings. He said he would appear before the House Appropriations Committee later and ask for the additional sum.

In oral arguments, Solicitor General Robert H. Jackson yesterday asked the Supreme Court to uphold the constitutionality of provisions of the 1936 tax law subjecting Federal judges to income taxation.

He argued that the Government had full authority to require Eighth Circuit Judge Joseph W. Woodrough to include his $12,500 annual salary in his income tax return. Counsel for Judge Woodrough declared the Constitution prohibits Congress from reducing salaries of Federal judges through taxation.

Doubts that the $1,477,000,000 requested by President Roosevelt for the WPA net year "can possibly be enough" were expressed in some Senatorial quarters yesterday.

Pointing out that the President had fought uncompromisingly to obtain enough funds during the current fiscal year to keep an average of 3,000,000 workers on WPA rolls, some Senators inquired how he could hope to be able to reduce this total to 2,000,000 in the 12 months beginning July 1. They added that they anticipated a demand in a few months for a supplementary appropriation.

In his message Thursday, the President said he predicated the one-third reduction in WPA rolls on an expected improvement in business conditions.

One Southern New Dealer said he thought the message was a challenge to business. "The President is answering the demand of business for a cut in expenditures—now, if business fails to take up the slack in employment, it will have no right to criticize when the President comes back next winter for an additional relief appropriation," he declared.

Hitler Speech Denounced as Blow to Peace

Comment

speech as "ending the matter of further world peace discussions."

"Some Encouragement"

Among those who saw some grounds for hope were Senators George (Democrat), of Georgia, and Connally (Democrat), of Texas, both members of the Foreign Relations Committee, and Representatvie Ford (Democrat), of Mississippi. Hitler's general expression of willingness to consider disarmament, led George to say he could see "some encouragement for world peace."

Speaker Bankhead termed the talk "specious and unpromising" and "filled with vague threats." He declared that it "in no measure affords any assurance of stability and peace."

Senator Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, was "glad to note that it wasn't a hateful speech," while Senator Logan (Democrat), of Kentucky, looked upon it as "very sinister for Europe but rather peaceful as far as the United States is concerned."

Representative Dingell (Democrat), Michigan, called the speech "blustering, pugnacious" and Representative Arnold (Democrat), Illinois, said there could "be do doubt of Hitler's intention to continue his program until he achieves his aims."

Representative Fish (Republican), New York, said he did not believe there would be a war in Europe "unless the hate and war-crazy Administration at Washington goads the British and French into it with false promises."

Senator Lundeen (Farm Labor), of Minnesota, said he was "confirmed" in his resolve "never to vote an American dollar or a drop of American blood into the quarrels of Europe."

Bloom Calls It "Mockery"

Other reaction included:

Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina—"It seemed to me Hitler was entirely on the defensive. It was a political speech attempting to justify his actions to the German people. I believe the President's telegram did this—it showed the necessity of Hitler giving an accounting of himself to his own people."

Representative Bloom (Democrat), of New York, acting chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee—"There probably never has been such a mockery of history and reason. The world can now see how the German people are being lulled and drugged into actually believing Hitler's side of the story. In one breath Hitler says he wants peace for the whole world. In the next breath he makes a virtual ultimatum of war to Poland."

Senate Minority Leader McNary—"I think Hitler left the door open for further negotiations and am more convicted than ever there will be no war in Europe. I think we should try to forget now about the foreign situation and get down to business on the domestic situation.

The Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., regent of the School of Foreign Service, Georgetown University—"The reply of Mr. Hitler is a relatively assuring pronouncement. . . . The Polish paragraphs, however, present a still unsolved and dangerous problem."

Resumption of normal diplomatic relations between the United States and Germany, meanwhile, was considered to have been brought no nearer by the chancellor's scornful talk. The ambassador from each country to the other has been held at home for several months, with a charge d'affaires at each of the respective embassies.

Hits Dictator Speech Gag

Peoria, Ill., April 28 (INS).—Assailing dictator nations for denying their people the "freedom to find out," John W. Studebaker, U. S., Commissioner of Education, tonight declared that because totalitarian nations would not think and plan co-operatively, "we face the specter of war."

Lashing out against governments which decree against public discussions of their policies, Studebaker said:

"One of the most menacing things about this new Frankenstein's monster (dictatorship) of racial and nationalistic fanaticism is that it threatens our freedom to find out the ways to a better world. The worst feature about dictatorship is not that it persecutes its opponents, but that it prevents people from probing into their problems."

Senators Back Bigger Army Intelligence

Committee to Report Measure for Stronger Service on Monday

Legislation to strengthen the Army Intelligence Service has been approved by the Senate Military Affairs Committee.

The group will report on Monday a bill permitting assignment of a general officer to head the vitally important intelligence unit and expand it along with other branches of the Army General Staff. Twenty-two selected officers will be added to the staff under the terms of the legislation, while administratively the War Department is increasing the number of military attaches, officials said.

And while bolstering our own information seeking service, the Army tightened up on foreign sources of information here. A new policy was laid down restricting data given out as to war plane contracts. Neither numbers of planes ordered or their delivery dates will be disclosed in the future, it was said, not only to keep secret the numbers of each type acquired but the time it takes to get the huge air expansion program under way.

Aliens Restricted in Plants

At the same time, restrictions on the employment of aliens in plane and munitions factories have been greatly tightened. To prevent spying and sabotage, the Army carefully examines all cases of aliens employed in such plants, denying work permits whenever any ground for suspicion exists.

Under additional funds for intelligence activities allowed in the recently passed Army appropriation bill, military attache offices are being established in Hungary, Rumania, Peru and Venezuela. A little later in the year, an attache may be sent to Greece and another to either Colombia or Central America.

The number of assistant attaches is also being increased. A Japanese-speaking officer was recently dispatched to American Embassy in China, and another with probably be ordered to Mexico.

To strengthen military ties with South America, it is expected that Brig. Gen. George C. Marshall, nominated Thursday to be the next chief of staff of the Army, will visit Brazil during the next few months. He will take command of the Army upon the retirement of Gen. Malin Craig this summer.

Gen. Marshall is now on an inspection trip of Air Corps fields, and will help dedicate the Army's new air depot at Sacramento, Calif., today. Maj. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, chief of Air Corps, is accompanying him.

D. C. Will Survey Trouble Spots On Highways

The District Highway Department yesterday announced plans for a survey to cure evils at special trouble spots throughout the city, through Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, highway director. The program, he said, calls for elevated pedestrian islands at many of the principal "suicide corners" and channels to guide vehicular traffic at congested points.

Trouble-making streets will be uncovered by the use of electric eyes to count vehicles in the flow of traffic. Peak traffic load spots will receive special treatment. The work will be conducted jointly with the United States Bureau of Public Roads. F. W. Lovejoy, of the bureau's staff, will assist Capt. Whitehurst.

Preliminary plans for "channelizing" traffic have been made for Alaska and Georgia avenues, Concord and Georgia avenues, Fourth street and New Jersey avenue and Second street and Pennsylvania avenue.

D. C. Returning Suspect in Killing Of Policeman

Two Washington detectives left yesterday for Newark to return Willie Bullock, colored, under indictment here for the fatal shooting of Policeman George W. Shinault in 1932. He was seized in Newark after an error in his fingerprint classification had been rectified recently.

Preparation for a speedy trial was being made last night.

Bullock has been arrested six times since the slaying of Shinault, it was revealed.

Britain Cool To Hitler's Bid For New Pact

Chamberlain Would Be Ousted if He Negotiated, Is View

By the Associated Press.

London, April 28.—The British foreign office, officially silent on Hitler's speech, was reliably reported tonight to have rejected his suggestion that Germany and Great Britain negotiate a new naval agreement.

A foreign office spokesman pointed out that the German government specifically agreed on June 18, 1935, the date of signing of the Anglo-German naval pact repudiated by Hitler today, that the agreement was "permanent and definite."

A semi-official source said "the foreign office view is that the Chamberlain government would fall if it attempted to negotiate a new naval treaty with Germany after Hitler's repudiation of the old one."

Simon Notes New Policy

Shortly after Hitler spoke Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir John Simon said new policy in Europe was the result of "the action of Germany."

"The thing that has changed British policy and changed it with unanimous approval is the action of Germany," he said. "It is no longer true that German policy is limited to bringing Germans within the Reich.

"Recent actions go further than that, and if these actions portend an effort at domination over the rest of Europe it is an effort which Britain must oppose."

Threats Leave Navy Cold

British naval quarter were indifferent to Germany's threats to build up beyond the 100-35 ratio established by the 1935 agreement. They pointed out tha t the expense of a capital ship race would be much harder on Germany than on Britain, that Britain had an advantage in men and materials available, and that the building of big ships would take a long time.

There still was some disagreement in diplomatic circles tonight regarding the more purely political phases of the speech, but this much was generally agreed:

The speech was relatively moderate in tone, but still did nothing to relieve the tension.

Hitler's disclosure to the world of negotiations between Germany and Poland have made it difficult for either to make concessions.

By his reference to Britain's colonial record Hitler made a renewed bid for support of the section of influential Britons who in the past have favored some colonial readjustments in Germany's favor.

Hitler ignored the offer of Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax to give a specific pledge that Britain had no intention to encircle Germany.

Stocks Are Firm

Prime Minister Chamberlain left to spend the week-end in the country at Chequers, and stocks were firm after delivery of the speech.

The omission of any mention of Soviet Russia was noted carefully here. It was observed that until several months ago a harangue against Russia was an inevitable part of every Hitler speech. In his last two speeches he has not mentioned the Soviet Union.

Some diplomats believe this is part of a careful policy not to anger Joseph Stalin into joining the British-French bloc.

It was noted also that his reference to Japan was slight. Diplomats believed Hitler had hoped to announce that Japan had put her military might behind the Rome-Berlin axis.

Note Ends Pact

Special English-language copies of Hitler's speech were flown here by a military airplane and delivered by the German charge d'affaires, Dr. T. Kordt, at the foreign office just as the Fuehrer began speaking. He also delivered a note denouncing the naval treaty.

In this note the German government said that the British government by its "encirclement policy" had "one-sidedly withdrawn the basis" for the naval treaty "and therefore nullified" it "as well as the 'declaration' of July 17, 1937, complementing it."

The note contained the offer of a new agreement in these words:

"The German government, in case the royal British government attaches value to entering into negotiations anew with Germany concerning problems relative thereto, will glady do so. It would be happy if it then proved possible to arrive at a clear and unequivocal understanding on a safe basis."

Sub-committee Approval Seen For USHA Bill

Ellender Sees 4-1 Vote On Doubling Loans To $1,600,000,000

A bill permitting the United States Housing Authority to increase its $800,000,000 loan authorization to $1,600,000,000 will be approved Monday by a Senate subcommittee, it was learned yesterday.

The measure will also carry with it an authorization for the USHA to pay a yearly subsidy on its housing projects of $45,000,000, bringing the total for this purpose to $73,000,000 annually.

Senator Ellender (Democrat), of Louisiana, chairman of the Education and Labor sub-committee considering the bill, said he was confident the increased USHA authorizations would be granted by at least a 4-to-1 vote of the five-man subcommittee.

Senator Wagner (Democrat), of New York, author of the bill, has said that unless Congress makes the funds available, "no further projects can be undertaken" by USHA in its low-cost, slum-clearance housing program.

The additional $800,000,000 authorized in the pending measure would be loaned by USHA to local housing authorities at a current interest rate of 3¼ per cent. The program's aggregate net annual cost to the Federal Government at present interest rates would be about $44,000,000, Senator Wagner has estimated.

White House Official View Holds Address 'No Reply'

By the Associated Press.

Hyde Park, N. Y., April 28.—Chancellor Hitler's Reichstag address was relayed in summary form by the State Department to President Roosevelt's home today, but it evoked no comment from the President.

The official view was that the speech did not constitute a "reply" to Mr. Roosevelt's non-aggression message as required by diplomatic usage, and therefore the President could not be expected to give any opinion or make any further moves until he had received a personal message from Hitler.

A secretary said the Chief Executive slept until his usual hour this morning and did not awaken until the German leader had finished his long address. The usual Friday morning press conference was canceled.

The only statement from the President during the day was a denial of a Washington story by Arthur Krock in the New York Times that some time before the Munich conference last fall Mr. Roosevelt asked Hitler and Mussolini to meet him at a sea rendezvous to discuss ways of guaranteeing peace and that the dictators rejected the proposal.

The President authorized the following formal statement:

"I have read the Krock story in the New York Times. It is not true, but otherwise it is interesting and well written."

The story said the President's purpose was to "learn from the dictators at first hand their minimum terms for pledging lasting peace and, if he found these practicable, to offer his services as intermediary."

It was reiterated at the temporary White House today that the President completed the speech he will deliver Sunday afternoon in opening the New York World's Fair before Hitler began to address the Reichstag.

Times Man Belittles Denial

By the Associated Press.

Arthur Krock, Washington correspondent of the New York Times, said last night he had anticipated President Roosevelt's denial of his story in the Times that the President had proposed that Hitler and Mussolini meet him at sea to discuss petace terms.

His statement follows:

"I anticipated the denial. There may be others. Persons with whom the President discussed his peace efforts were separately and unconnectedly my informants. Separately and unconnectedly they volunteered the outline as I presented it, and gave Mr. Roosevelt as its source."

Disagreement Hinders Union Of Methodists

Attitude Toward Divorce, Titles for Officials Among Complications

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, April 28.—A mass of problems grounded in tradition and differences of opinion are complicating unification efforts of the three Methodist groups despite an overwhelming expression of their desire for a single church.

They range from questions of title for officials through complex discussions of the attitude toward divorce.

One issue—which some said involved the question of "church democracy"—was settled on the floor of the uniting conference today.

Scores of others remain to be solved before the 900 delegates and 62 bishops can put into effect the plan of union already approved in theory by the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church South and the Methodist Protestant Church.

Northern Church Liberalizes Rule

For years all branches forbade ministers to officiate at the remarriage of a person divorced on any but the "scriptural" grounds of adultery. Recently the Northern branch voted to leave to the consciences of individual ministers the remarriage problem. Supporters of the change, explained one minister, argued there were other grounds "as grievous."

Boundaries of church conferences present a different kind of problem, but an acute one, where the divided churches overlap. Church conferences are geographical divisions, ranging in size from a part of one State to several States. In the separate churches these boundaries have followed different lines. Those lines must be harmonized, in the face of differences over voting control and conference officials.

The South Church has clung to the historic term of presiding elder for the chief administrative official of each subdivision. The Northern branch has called similar officials general superintendents. Already some delegates are bickering over the proposed compromise term of district elder.

Youth Another Issue

Youth movements raise another issue. The North and South branches have had Epworth Leagues operating separately. The Protestants have had a Christian Endeavor Society. The uniting conference must bring these three together.

The problem of handling pension funds for superannuated ministers has one committee hard at work. In addition to harmonizing the divergent systems, the committee must iron out legal questions raised because the funds are administered under charters issued by different States and providing varying restrictions.

The Protestant Church has had a Sunday school board separate from its general education board. The other churches have administered colleges, secondary schools and Sunday school programs under a single board. A new plan of control is sought.

The conference must decide whether women's missionary work will be conducted under an autonomous board as in the North Church or as part of one general missionary board.

shows, the Cherokee dance team will show its skill in the ceremonial dances. Their participation in the festival provides a rare opportunity for seeing the blending of red and white cultures.

Play party games, favorite form of entertainment in pioneer days, were presented by young people from Smithville, Tenn. The games are popular with the younger generation as they were with the early settlers, judging from the verve and spontaneous gaiety of the dancers.

"Yonder She Comes," one of the mountain folks' many marriage games, serves the same purpose as the more modern "Postoffice." Mountain girls are spunky, though, and their partners received about as many slaps as they did kisses.

Westernized Dances

The Cheyenne Mountain School children from Colorado, who appeared on both programs the opening day, played a return engagement at yesterday's show. With many a "Yip-pee!" they showed what cowboy folk can do to sedate country dances. They also will appear today.

Spirituals and work songs of Southern plantations were presented by the Cotton Blossom Singers, young men from the Piney Woods School in Mississippi. From the North came students from Putney, Vt., to perform New England versions of the square dance. Thirteen-year-old Jimmie Powers, of Indianapolis, played a hornpipe on the fiddle, an instrument with which he has been familiar since the age of 5.

As for the older generation, there were grizzled miners, veterans in the anthracite coal fields, who sang the ballads of the mines. "Sailor Dad" Hunt, former before-the-mast sailor from Marion, Va., entertained with his version of "Blow the Man Down."

Canal Songs

Songs of the C. & O. Canal came from both extremities of the waterway. Jess Swain, lock keeper from Great Falls, Md., sang of "Johnny Howard," hero of the eastern end of the canal, while Capt. P. R. Nye contributed a ballad of the Ohio portion.

Seats are still available for the closing matinee and evening performance of the festival today. The ticket office at The Washington Post will be open all day; the Constitution Hall box office opens at 1 p. m. and 7 p. m. Prices range from 50 cents to $1 for the matinee and from 50 cents to $2 in the evening.

Prince Georges Charter Will Be Put to Vote

Law Increasing Town Board Won't Affect This Year's Election

Prince Georges County
Bureau of The Post.
42 University Rd., Calvert Hills, Md.
Telephone GReenwood 3569.

Signing this week by Gov. O'Conor of a bill amending the charter of Cottage City to increase the number of town commissioners by one, will not affect this year's election Monday, Commissioner Alan Leighton said last night.

Voters of the town, in addition to balloting on four commissioners, will be given an opportunity to accept or reject the charter amendments. Principal provisions of the new charter are:

To increase the number of commissioners from four to five, the fifth official to be elected at large. The other four would be from the wards of the town, but would be voted upon by the whole electorate as at present.

To provide for staggered two-year terms, instead of having all terms of office expire each year as at present.

To permit the commission to set the town fire tax at not to exceed 12 cents on $100 of property, instead of the mandatory 12-cent rate now charged.

To Take Effect at Once

If a majority of those voting approve the charter changes, they will go into effect immediately. However, the election provisions will not be called into use until the May, 1940, election.

At that time five commissioners will be elected, those receiving the highest and second highest number of votes serving two years, and the other three terms of one year. In 1941 three commissioners would be elected to three-year terms.

There is only one contested post in Cottage City this year. George Reinbold, commissioner from the Second Ward for eight years, is opposed for re-election by Nels P. Rassmussen. First Ward Commissioner Warner L. Wilmuth and Third Ward Commissioner Alan Leighton are unopposed for re-election, while Ralph L. Bailey is unopposed for election to fill the Fourth Ward commission post left vacant by the death of Commissioner R. H. Bagwell.

Polls will be open at the firehouse Monday from 5 p. m. to 10 p. m.

One committee, headed by Harry I Eisenhauer, club treasurer, will visit the tract this afternoon; the other, headed by J. Raymond Fletcher, first vice president, will make an inspection tomorrow.

The club has accumulated about $3,000 to establish a camp for underprivileged children, through three years of public dances and lawn fetes. With presentation of the land by Boswell, it is hoped that construction of the camp can be hastened.

The organization, at its meeting this week at Beaver Dam Country Club was host to 31 members of the North Baltimore club. The meeting was arranged by S. C. Helfer.

an area within 60 miles of New York. Visibility at this field was poor and ceiling low.

American radio stations co-operated to guide the Russian fliers to their destination. Stations in New York, Boston and Newark broadcast weather information in Russian every 15 minuets and kept repeating the Moskva's call letters to permit Gordienko constantly to check direction.

Lindbergh Close at Hand

Drama was added by the coincidence that Col. Lindbergh, whom Kokkinaki bitterly criticized after a previous warm friendship, was close at hand though not actually present in the crowd gathered at the airport to cheer the fliers.

Col. Lindbergh interrupted his survey of national military aviation needs to welcome his wife and two sons returning from the exile he imposed on his family three years ago to safeguard his children against kidnaping.

When Col. and Mrs. Lindbergh were in Russia last fall, Kokkinaki was one of the Soviet aces assigned as guides to the American flier, and together they visited many factories and airports, and held long conferences on aeronautical matters. Kokkinaki was at that time the national air hero because of a nonstop flight from Moscow to Vladivostok, only 100 miles less than the present flight to New York.

As dusk deepened, rain fell steadily at Floyd Bennett field and the crowd began to fear the fliers might land short of their destination for safety's sake.

Bear Greetings to Fair

It was considered certain Kokkinaki would make every effort, short of fool-hardiness, to utilize the municipal airport designated as terminus of the flight in the official schedule.

One reason for this was that the Russians made the flight to demonstrate Russian aviation skill in connection with opening of the New York World's Fair Sunday. They bore a special message of greeting to the fair from Moscow. In an effort to assist in the Russians' determination to land where they had planned to field officials turned on the floodlights early and cleared the field to facilitate a fog-obscured landing.

Senate Sub-committee Discusses New Armory for District

$2,750,000 Item For Proposed Guard Building Considered

Prospects for a new National Guard armory were brightened yesterday when the Senate sub-committee in charge of the 1940 District appropriations bill discussed the advisability of including $2,750,000 for the proposed structure.

The East Capitol street site would be favored in any Senate authorization provision, it appeared certain, despite the House bill's provision for $150,000 for an armory location in the Southwest part of the city.

Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, chairman of the sub-committee, said he favored the East Capitol location, also advocated by the Park and Planning Commission. The House bill, on which the Senators are now making charges and restorations, does not include authorization for beginning armory construction.

District department heads will be called before the subcommittee next week to show why additions should be made to the measure as it now stands—reduced by more than $700,000 below the Budget Bureau's estimate of needed local revenue.

If Congress fails to pass a new tax bill at this session, the sub-committee was told, the District deficit next year would be $3,485,000. This figure is based on the fact that the eisting business privilege tax law expires on June 30, at which time the real estate tax goes back from $1.75 to $1.50, unless the Commissioners exercise their general authority to keep the $1.75 rate. If the present rate is retained and no other changes made, the deficit would be $185,000.

The jury in the latest trial deliberated 90 minutes yesterday and 45 minutes this morning before it was discharged by the court.

Reich Chancellor Declares Principal Ambition Is to Free German People

War-Mongers Assailed in His Address

Declares He Always Has Sought to Be Friend of Britain

Berlin, April 28 (AP).—Following is the official German news agency (DNB) translation of the text of Reichsfuehrer Hitler's speech today to the Reichstag in answer to President Roosevelt's peace proposals.

Members of the German Reichstag: The President of the United States of America has addressed a telegram to me with the curious contents of which you are already familiar. Before I, the addressee, actually received the document the rest of the world had already been informed of it by radio and newspaper reports; and numerous commentaries in organs of the democratic world press had already generously enlightened us as to fact that this telegram was a very skillful tactical document destined to impose upon the states in which people govern the responsibility for war-like measures adopted by the plutocratic countries; in view of these facts I decided to summon the German Reichstag so that you gentlemen might have the opportunity of hearing my answer first, and of either confirming that answer or rejecting it. In addition I considered it desirable to keep to the method of procedure initiated by President Roosevelt and to inform the rest of the world on my part and by our means of my answer.

Gives Vent to Feeling

But I should like also to take this opportunity of giving expression to feelings with which the tremendous historical happiness of the month of March inspire me. I can give vent to my deepest feelings only in the form of humble thanks to Providence, who called upon me and vouchsafed to me, once an unknown soldier of the Great War, to rise to be the leader of my so dearly loved people.

Providence caused me to find the way to free our people from its deepest misery without any shedding of blood, and to lead it upward once more. Providence has granted that I might fulfill my life's task—to raise my German people up out of the depth of defeat, and to liberate it from the bonds of the most infamous dictate of all times, for this alone has been the aim of my actions.

Since the day I first entered politics I have been moved by no other idea than that of winning back the freedom of the German nation, restoring the power and strength of the Reich, overcoming the internal disruption of the nation, remedying its isolation from the rest of the world, and safeguarding maintenance of its independent economic and political existence.

I have worked only to restore that which others once broke by force. I have desired only to make good that which satanic malice or human unreason destroyed or demolished. I have therefore taken no step which violated the rights of others, but have only restored that justice which was violated 20 years ago.

All German Once

The present greater German Reich contains no territory which was not from the earliest times part of this Reich, not bound up with or subject to its sovereignty. Long before an American continent had been discovered—to say nothing of settled—by white people, this Reich existed not merely in its present extent but with the addition of many regions and provinces which have since been lost.

Twenty-one years ago when the bloodshed of the war came to an end millions of minds were filled with the ardent hope that a peace of reason and justice would reward and bless the nations which had been visited by the fearful scourge of the great war. I say "reward" for all these men and women, whatever the conclusions arrived at by historians, bore no responsibility for these fearful happenings.

And if in some countries there still were politicians who even at that time could be charged with responsibility for this, the most atrocious massacre of all time, yet vast numbers of combatant soldiers of every country and nation were at most deserving of pity, but were by no means guilty.

I, myself, as you know had never played a part in politics before the war, and only like millions of others performed such duties as I was called upon to fulfill as a decent citizen and soldier. It was therefore with an absolutely clear conscience that I was able to take up the cause of freedom and the future of my people, both during and after the war.

And I can therefore speak in the name of millions and millions of others equally blameless when I declare that all those who had only fought for their nation in loyal fulfilment of their duty were entitled to a peace of reason and justice so that mankind might at last set to work to make good by joint effort the losses which all had suffered.

But the millions were cheated of this peace; for not only did the German people or other people fighting on our side suffer through the peace treaties, but these treaties had an annihilating effect on the victor countries.

States Dissolved

For the first time appeared the misfortune that politics should be controlled by men who had not fought in the war. The feeling of hatred was unknown to soldiers, but not to those elderly politicians who had carefully preserved their own precious lives from the horror of war and who now descended upon humanity in the guise of insane spirits of revenge.

Hatred, malice and unreason were the intellectual forbears of the treaty of Versailles. Living space and states with history going back a thousand years were arbitrarily broken up and dissolved, since time immemorial men who belong together have been torn asunder; the economic conditions of life have been ignored while the peoples themselves have been converted into victors and vanquished, into masters possessing all rights and slaves possessing none.

This document of Versailles has fortunately been set down in black and white for later generations. For otherwise it would be later regarded as a fabulous product of a wild corrupt fantasy. Nearly 115 million people have been robbed of their right of self-determination, not by victorious soldiers but by mad politicians, and have been arbitrarily removed from old communities and made part of new ones without any consideration of blood, origin, reason and the economic conditions of life.

The results were dreadful. Though at that time statesmen were able to destroy a great many things, there was one factor which could not be eliminated: The gigantic mass of people living in central Europe, crowded together in a confined space, can only ensure its daily bread by the highest intensity of work and consequently of order.

But what did these statesmen of the so-called democratic empires know of these problems?

A crowd of the most stupid and ignorant people was let loose on humanity. In districts in which about 140 people have to gain a livelihood per square kilometer they merely destroyed the order which had been built up over nearly 2,000 years of historical development and created disorder without themselves being able or desirous to solve the problems confronting the communal life of these people—for which, moreover, as dictators of the New World order, they had at that time undertaken responsibility.

Cowardice Charged

However, when this new world order turned out to be a catastrophe, the democratic peace dictators of American and European origin were so cowardly that none of them ventured to take the responsibility for what occurred. Each put the blame on the others, thus endeavoring to save himself from the judgment of history. However, the people who were maltreated by their hatred and unreason were unfortunately not in a position to share with those who had injured them in this escape.

It is impossible to enumerate the stages of suffering of our own people. Robbed of the whole of its colonial possessions, deprived of all its financial resources, plundered by the so-called reparations and thus impoverished, our nation was driven into the blackest period of its national misfortune. And let it be noted that this was not National Socialist Germany, but Democratic Germany—the Germany which was weak enough to trust for a single moment the promises of the democratic statesmen.

Misery resulting therefrom and continuous want began to bring our nation politically to despair. Decent and industrious people of central Europe thought that they could see the possibility of deliverance in complete destruction of the order which appeared to have become a curse.

Says Jews Plunderers

Jewish parasites, on one hand, plundered the nation ruthlessly and, on the other hand, incited the people when it had been reduced to misery. As the misfortune of our nation became the only aim and object of this race it was possible to breed among the growing army of unemployed suitable elements for Bolshevik revolution.

Decay of political order and confusion of public opinion by the irresponsible Jewish press led to ever stronger shocks to the economic life and, consequently, to increasing misery and to greater readiness to absorb subversive Bolshevik ideas. The army of Jewish world revolution, as the army of unemployed was called, finally rose to almost 7,000,000.

Germany had never known this state of affairs before. In the living space of the great German people and of the old Hapsburg states belonging thereto, despite all the difficulties of the struggle for existence involved by excessive density of population, economic life had not become more uncertain in the course of time but, on the contrary, more and more secure.

Industry and diligence, great thrift and love of scrupulous order, though they did not enable people in this territory to accumulate excessive riches, did, at any rate, insure them against abject misery.

Results of the wretched peace forced upon them by democratic dictators were thus all the more terrible for these people who were damned at Versailles. Today we know the reason for this frightful outcome of the Great War.

Greed for Spoils

First it was greed for spoils. That which is seldom of value in the life of the individual could, they believed, be enlarged a millionfold and be represented to mankind as useful experiment. If large nations are plundered and the utmost squeezed out of them, it will then be possible to live a life of carefree idleness. Such was the opinion of these economic dilettantes.

To that end: One of the states themselves had to be dismembered. Germany had to be deprived of her colonial possessions although they were without any value to the world democracies; the most important districts yielding raw materials had been invaded and, if necessary, placed under the influence of the democracies and, above all, two unfortunate victims of that democratic ill-treatment of nations and individuals had to be prevented from ever recovering, let alone rising against their oppressors; thus was concocted the devilish plan to burden generations with the curse of those dictates. For 60, 70 or 100 years, Germany was to pay sums so exorbitant that the question of how they were actually to be raised could but remain a mystery to all concerned. It would have been absolutely impossible to raise such sums in gold, foreign currency or by way of regular payments in kind without the blinded collectors of this tribute perishing as well. As a matter of fact, these democratic peace dictators thoroughly destroyed world economy with their Versailles madness.

Their senseless dismemberment of peoples and states led to the destruction of common production and trade interests which had become well established in the course of hundreds of years, thus once more enforcing increased development of autarchic tendencies and, thus, extinction of general conditions of world economy which had hitherto existed.

Noticed Decay Signs

When 20 years ago I signed my name in the book of political life as the seventh member of the then German Workers' Party at Munich, I noticed signs of that decay becoming effective all around me. The worst of it, as I have already emphasized, was the utter despair of the masses which resulted, therefore, in the disappearance among educated classes of all confidence in human reason, let alone in a sense of justice, and at the same time in a predominance of brutal selfishness in all creatures so disposed.

The extent to which, in the course of what is now 20 years, I have been able once more to mold the nation from such chaotic disorganization into an organic whole and to establish a new order even now is part of German history. However, what I intend to propound before you today by way of introduction is, above all, the purport of my intentions with regard to foreign policy and their realization.

One of the most shameful acts of oppression ever committed is the dismemberment of the German nation and the political disintegration of her living space—which has, after all, been hers for thousands of years—provided for in the dictate of Versailles.

I have never, gentlemen, left any doubt that in point of fact it is scarcely possible anywhere in Europe to arrive at a harmony of state and national boundaries which will be satisfactory in every way. On one hand, migration of peoples which gradually came to a standstill during the last few centuries, and development of large communities on the other, have brought about a situation which, whatever way they look at it, must necessarily be considered unsatisfactory by those concerned.

It was, however, the very way in which these national and political developments were gradually stabilized in the last century which led many to consider themselves justified in cherishing hope that in the end a compromise would be found between respect for the national life of various European peoples and recognition of established political structures—a compromise by which, without destroying order in Europe and with it the existing economic basis, nationalities could nevertheless be preserved.

War Abolished Hope

This hope was abolished by the Great War. Peace—the dictate of Versailles—did justice neither to one principle nor to the other. Neither the right of self-determination nor yet political, let alone economic necessities and conditions for European development, were respected. Nevertheless, I never left any doubt that—as I have already emphasized—even revision of the treaty of Versailles would also find its limit somewhere. And I have always said so with utmost frankness—not for any tactical reasons but from my innermost conviction. As national leader of the German people, I have never left any doubt that whenever higher interests of the European comity were at stake, national interests must, if necessary, be relegated to second place in certain cases.

And—as I have already emphasized—this is not for tactical reasons, for I have never left any doubt that I am absolutely earnest in this attitude of mine. For quite a number of territories which might possibly be disputed I have, therefore, come to final decisions which I have proclaimed not only to the outside world but also to my own people, and have seen to it that they should abide by them.

I have not, as France did in 1870-1871, described the cession of Alsace-Lorraine as intolerable for the future, but I have here drawn a difference between the Saar territory and these two former imperial provinces. And I have never changed my attitude, nor will I ever do so. I have not allowed this attitude to be modified or jeopardized inside the country on any occasion, either in the press or any other way. Return of the Saar territory has done away with all territorial problems in Europe between France and Germany. I have, however, always regarded it as regrettable that French statesmen should take this attitude for granted.

Discussed Saar

This is, however, not the way to look at the matter. It was not for fear of France that I preached this attitude. As a former soldier I see no reason whatever for such fear. Moreover as regards the Saar territory I made it quite clear we would not countenance any refusal to return it to Germany.

No, I have confirmed this attitude to France as an expression of appreciation of the necessity to attain peace in Europe, instead of sowing the seed of continual uncertainty and even tension by making unlimited demands and continually asking for revision. If this tension has nevertheless now arisen, the responsibility does not lie with Germany but with those international elements which systematically produce such tension in order to serve their capitalist interests.

I have given binding declarations to a large number of states.

None of these states can complain that even a trace of a demand contrary thereto has even been made to them by Germany. None of the Scandinavian statesmen, for example, can contend that a request has ever been put to them by the German government or by German public opinion which was incompatible with the sovereignty and integrity of their state. I was pleased that a number of European states availed themselves of these declarations by the German government to express and emphasize their desire for absolute neutrality. This applies to Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, Denmark, etc.

I have already mentioned France. I need not mention Italy, with whom we are united in the deepest and closest friendship, or Hungary and Yugoslavia, with whom we as neighbors have the fortune to be on very friendly terms.

On the other hand, I have left no doubt from the first moment of my political activity that there existed other circumstances which represent such a mean and gross outrage of the right of self-determination of our people that we can never accept or indorse them.

Once Reich Buttress

I have never written a single line or made a single speech displaying a different attitude toward the above-mentioned states. On the other hand, with reference to other cases, I have never written a single line or made a single speech in which I have expressed any attitude contrary to my actions.

1. Austria! The oldest eastern march of the German people, was once the buttress of the German nation on the southeast of the Reich.

The Germans of this country are descended from settlers from all the German tribes, even though the Bavarian tribe did contribute a major portion. Later this Ostmark became the crown lands and nucleus of the five-century-old German empire, with Vienna as the capital of the German Reich of that period. This German Reich was finally broken up in the course of a gradual dissolution by Napoleon the Corsican, but continued to exist as a German federation and not so long ago fought and suffered in the greatest war of all time as an entity which was an expression of the national feelings of the people, even if it was no longer one united state. I myself am a child of this Ostmark.

Not only was the German Reich destroyed and Austria split up into its component parts by the criminals of Versailles, but Germans also were forbidden to acknowledge that community which they had confessed for more than a thousand years. I have always regarded elimination of this state of affairs as the highest and most holy task of my life. I have never failed to proclaim this determination. And I have always been resolved to realize these ideas which haunted me day and night.

I should have sinned against my call by Providence had I failed in my own endeavor to lead my native country and my German people of Ostmark back to the Reich, and, thus, to the community of German people.

In doing so, moreover, I have wiped out the most disgraceful side of the Treaty of Versailles. I have once more established the right of self-determination and done away with democratic oppression of seven and a half million Germans.

Results Expected

I removed the ban which prevented them from voting on their own fate, and carried out this vote before the whole world. The result was not only what I expected, but also precisely what had been anticipated by the Versailles democratic oppressors of the peoples.

2. When in the course of the migrations of peoples, the Germanic tribes began, for reasons inexplicable to us, to migrate out of the territory which is today Bohemia and Moravia, a foreign Slav people made its way into this territory and made a place for itself between the remaining Germans. Since that time the living space of this Slav people has been enclosed in the form of a horseshe by Germans.

From an economic point of view independent existence is, in the long run, impossible for these countries except on a basis of relationship with the German nation and German economy. But apart from this, nearly 4,000,000 Germans lived in this territory of Bohemia and Moravia. The policy of national annihiliation which set in, particularly after the treaty of Versailles, under pressure of the Czech majority, combined, too, with economic conditions and a rising tide of distress, led to emigration of these German elements, so that Germans left in territory were reduced to approximately 3,700,000.

The population of the fringe of territory is uniformly German but there are also large German linguistic enclaves in the interior. The Czech nation is, in its origins, foreign to us but in the thousand years in which the two peoples have lived side by side, a Czech culture has, in the main, been formed and molded by German influences. Czech economy owes its existence to the fact of having been part of the great German economic system. The capital of this country was for a time a German imperial city and it contains the oldest German university. Numerous cathedrals, town halls and palaces of nobility and citizen class, bear witness to the influence of German culture.

The Czech people itself has in the course of centuries alternated between close and more distant contacts with the German people. Every close contact resulted in a period in which both the German and the Czech nations flourished, every estrangement was calamitous in its consequences.

Familiar With Merits

We are familiar with the merits and values of the German people, but the Czech nation with the sum total of its skill and ability, its industry, its diligence, its love of its native soil and of its own national heritage, also deserves our respect.

There were, in actual fact, periods in which this mutual respect for the qualities of the other nation was a matter of course.

The Democratic peacemakers of Versailles can take credit for having assigned to this Czech people the special role of satellite state capable of being used against Germany. For this purpose they arbitrarily adjudicated foreign national property to the Czech state which was utterly incapable of survival on the strength of the Czech national unit alone; that is, they did violence to other nationalities in order to give a firm basis to a state which was to incorporate a latent threat to the German nation in central Europe. For this state, in which the so-called predominant national element was actually in the minority, could be maintained only by means of brutal assault on national units which formed a major part of the population.

This assault was possible only insofar as protection and assistance was granted by European democracies. This assistance could naturally be expected only on condition that this state was prepared loyally to take over and play the role which it had been assigned at birth but the purpose of this role was no other than to prevent consolidation of central Europe, to provide a bridge to Europe for Bolshevik aggression and, above all, to act as mercenary of European democracies against Germany. Everything else followed automatically. The more this state tried to fulfill the task it had been set, the greater was the resistance put up by national minorities. And the greater resistance, the more it became necessary to resort to oppression. This inevitable hardening of internal antitheses led, in its turn, to increased dependence of democratic European founders and benefactors of the state. For they alone were in position to maintain in the long run the economic existence of this unnatural and artificial creation.

Liberty Only Interest

Germany was primarily interested in one thing only and that was to liberate nearly four million Germans in this country from their unbearable situation and make it possible for them to return to home country and to the thousand-year-old Reich.

It was only natural that this problem immediately brought up all other aspects of the nationalities problem. But it also was natural that removal of different national groups should deprive what was left of the state of all capacity to survive—a fact of which the founders of state had been well aware when they planned it at Versailles since it was for this very reason that they decided on assault on other minorities and had forced these against their will to become part of this amateurishly constructed state.

I have likewise never left any doubt about my opinion and attitude. It is true that as long as Germany herself was powerless and defenseless this oppression of almost four million German could be carried out without the Reich offering any practical resistance. However, only a child in politics could have believed that the German nation would remain for ever in the state it was in 1919.

Only as long as international traitors, supported from abroad, held direction of the German state could the people rely on these disgraceful conditions being patiently put up with.

From the moment when, after the victory of national socialism, these traitors had to transfer their domicile to the place whence they had received their subsidies, the solution of this problem was only a question of time.

Affected Nationalities

Moreover, it was exclusively a question affecting nationalities concerned, not one concerning western Europe. It certainly is understandable that western Europe was interested in the artificial state brought into being in its interest. But that nationalities surrounding this state should regard this interest as a determining factor for them was a false conclusion which was, perhaps, regrettable for many.

Insofar as this interest was only directed to the financial establishment of this state, Germany could have had nothing to say if this financial interest had not been subjected exclusively to the political aims of democracies. Financial requirements of this state followed but one guiding idea, namely, creation of a military state armed to the teeth with the view of forming a bastion extending into the German Reich which promised to be the starting point for military operations in connection with invasions of the Reich from the West or, at any rate, an air base of undoubted value.

What was expected from this state was shown most clearly by the observation of the French air minister, M. Pierre Cot, who calmly stated that the duty of this state in case of any conflict was to be an airdrome for the landing and taking off of bombers from which it would be possible to destroy the most important German industrial centers in a few hours.

It is comprehensible, therefore, that the German government in their turn decided to destroy this airdrome for bombing planes. They did not come to this decision because of hatred of the Czech people. Quite the contrary. For, in the course of a thousand years during which the German and Czech people had lived togegther, there had often been periods of close co-operation lasting hundreds of years, and between these, it is true, only short periods of tension.

Spirit of Guardian

In such periods of tension, the passions of people struggling together in the front trenches of national position can very easily dim the feeling of justice and thus lead to the wrong total impression. This is a feature of every war. It was solely in the long epochs of living together in harmony that the two peoples agreed they were both entitled to advance the holy claim to deference for and respect of their nationality.

But in these years of struggle, my own attitude toward the Czech people was never anything else than that of guardian of the unilateral national and Reich interest combined with feelings of respect for the Czech people. One thing is certain: if the democratic midwives of this state had succeeded in attaining their ultimate goal, the German Reich would certainly not have been destroyed, although we might have sustained heavy losses. No! The Czech people, by reason of its size and position, would presumably have had to put up with much more dreadful and—I am convinced—catastrophic consequences.

I am happy it has proved possible, even to the annoyance of democratic interests, to avoid this catastrophe in central Europe thanks to our own moderation and also to the good judgment of Czech people. That which the best and wisest Czechs have struggled for decades to attain,

Hitler Says Versailles Cheated Millions of Peace

Czech Nation Held Incapable Of Surviving

Guarantee Refused Because Conditions Laid At Munich Were Lacking

is as matter of course granted to this people in the national socialist German Reich, namely, the right to their own nationality and the right to foster this nationality and to revive it. National Socialist Germany has no notion of ever betraying the racial principles of which we are proud. They will be beneficial not only to the German nation but to the Czech people as well.

Puts Blame on Benes

But we do demand recognition of a historical necessity and of an economic exigency in which we all find ourselves. When I announced the solution of this problem in the Reichstag on February 22, 1938, I was convinced I was obeying the necessity of a central European situation.

As late as March, 1938, I believed that by means of gradual evolution it might prove possible to solve the problem of minorities in this state and, at one time or another, by means of mutual co-operation to achieve a common platform which would be advantageous to all interests concerned, politically as well as economically.

It was not until M. Benes, who was in the hands of his democratic, international financiers, turned the problem into a military one and unleashed a wave of suppression over Germans, at the same time attempting by that mobilization of which you all know to inflict international defeat upon the German state and to damage its prestige, that it became clear to me a solution by these means was no longer possible. For the false report of German mobilization was quite obviously inspired from abroad and suggested to the Czechs in order to cause the German Reich such loss of prestige.

I do not need to repeat once more that in May of the past year Germany had not mobilized one single man although we were all of the opinion that the very fate of Herr Schuschnigg should have shown all others the advisability of working for mutual understanding by means of more just treatment of national minorities.

I for my part, was, at any rate, prepared to attempt this kind of peaceful development with patience and, if need be, in a process lasting some years. However, it was exactly this peaceful solution which was a thorn in the flesh of agitators in the democracies.

Means to an End.

They hate us Germans and would prefer to eradiate us completely. What do the Czechs mean to them? They are nothing but a means to an end. And what do they care for the fate of a small and valiant nation, why should they worry about the lives of hundreds of thousands of brave soldiers who would have been sacrificed for their policy?

These Western European peace mongers were not concerned to work for peace but to cause bloodshed so as, in this way, to set nations against one another and thus cause still more blood to flow. For this reason they invented the story of German mobilization and humbugged Prague public opinion with it. It was intended to provide an excuse for Czech mobilization. And then, by this means, they hoped to be able to exert the desired military pressure on elections in Sudeten Germany which could no longer be avoided.

According to their view, there remained only two alternatives for Germany: Either to accept this Czech mobilization and with it a disgraceful blow to her prestige or a settling of accounts with Czecho-Slovakia, a bloody war, and thus, perhaps, the possibility of mobilizing the nations of western Europe who had no interest in these matters, thereby involving them in inevitable bloodlust so as to immerse humanity in a new catastrophe in which some would have the honor of losing their lives and others the pleasure of making war profits.

Stresses Decisions

You are acquainted, gentlemen, with decisions I made at the time:

1. Solution of this question, and what is more by October 10, 1938, at the latest.

2. Preparations of this solution with all means necessary to leave no doubt that any attempt at intervention would be met by the united force of the whole nation.

It was at this juncture that I decreed and ordered construction of the western fortifications. September 25, 1938, they were already in such condition that their power of resistance was 30 to 40 times as great as that of the old Siegfried line in the great war. They have now been practically completed and are at the present moment being enlarged by new lines outside Aachen and Saarbrucken which I ordered later. These, too, are very largely ready for defense. In view of the condition of these greatest fortifications ever constructed, the German nation may feel perfectly assured that no power in this world will ever succeed in ever breaking through this front.

When the first provocative attempt at utilizing Czech mobilization had failed to lead to the desired result there then set in a second phase in which the tendency of this affair, which really concerned central Europe alone, became all the more obvious.

If the cry of "never another Munich!" is raised in the world today this simply confirms the fact that a peaceful solution of the problem appeared to be the most fatal thing that ever happened in the eyes of those war-mongers. They are sorry no blood was shed—not their blood, of course—for these agitators are, of course, never to be found where shots are being fired but only where money is being made! No, it is the blood of nameless soldiers.

No Necessity for Munich

Moreover, there would have been no necessity for the Munich conference, for that conference was only made possible by the fact that countries which had at first incited those concerned to resist at all costs, later on, when the situation pressed for solution in one way or another, were compelled to try and secure for themselves a more or less respectable retreat; for without Munich, that is to say without the interference of the countries of western Europe, a solution of the entire problem—if it had even grown so acute—would very likely have been the easiest thing in the world. The decision of Munich led to the following result:

1. The return of the most essential parts of German border settlements in Bohemia and Moravia to the Reich.

2. The keeping open of the possibility of solution of other problems of that state, that is the return or separation of existing Hungarian and Slovak minorities.

3. There still remained the question of guarantees. As far as Germany and Italy were concerned a guarantee of this state had, from the first, been made dependent upon the consent of all interested parties bordering on Czecho-Slovakia, that is to say, the guarantee was coupled with actual solution of problems concerning the parties mentioned which were still unsolved.

The following problems were still left open:

1. Return of Magyar districts to Hungary;

2. Return of Polish districts to Poland;

3. Solution of the Slovak question;

4. Solution of the Ukrainian question.

As you know negotiations between Hungary and Czechoslovakia had scarcely begun when both Czechoslovak and Hungarian negotiators requested Germany and Italy, the country which stands side by side with Germany, to act as arbitrators in defining new frontiers between Slovakia, Carpatho-Ukraine and Hungary. The countries concerned made no use themselves of the possibility of appealing to the four powers; on contrary, they expressly renounced this possibility, that is they declined it.

All Desired Peace

And this was only natural. All desired peace and quiet. Italy and Germany were prepared to answer their call. Neither England nor France raised any objection to this arrangement which actually constituted a formal departure from Munich agreement. Nor was it possible for them to do so; it would have been madness for Paris or London to have protested against an action on the part of Germany or Italy which had been undertaken solely at the request of the countries concerned.

The decision arrived at by Germany and Italy proved—as always in such cases—entirely satisfactory to neither party. From the very beginning the difficulty was that it had to be accepted voluntarily by both parties. Thus, when the decision came to be put into effect violent protests were raised immediately following on the acceptance by the two states.

Hungary, prompted by general and particular interests, demanded Carpatho-Ukraine while Poland demanded direct means of communication with Hungary.

It was clear that in such circumstances even the remnant of the state which Versailles had brought into being was predestined to extinction. It was a fact that perhaps only one single state was interested in preservation of the status quo and that was Rumania; the man best authorized to speak on behalf of that country told me personally how desirable it would be to have a direct line of communication with Germany, perhaps via Carpatho-Ukraine and Slovakia.

An Artificial State

I mention this as an illustration of the feeling of being menaced by Germany from which the Rumanian government—according to American clairvoyants—are supposed to be suffering, but it was now clear that it could not be Germany's task permanently to oppose the development or actually to fight for the maintenance of a state of affairs for which we could never have made ourselves responsible. The stage was thus reached at which, in the name of the German government, I decided to make a declaration to the effect that we had no intention of any longer incurring the reprobation of opposing the common wishes of Poland and Hungary as regards their frontiers simply in order to keep an open road of approach for Germany to Rumania. Since, moreover, the Czech government resorted once more to its old methods and Slovakia also gave expression to its desire for independence, further existence of the state was out of question. The construction of Czecho-Slovakia worked out at Versailles had had its day.

It broke up not because Germany desired its break-up, but because in the long run it was impossible to construct and uphold around a conference table artificial states which are incapable of survival. Consequently, in reply to the question regarding a guarantee which was submitted by England and France a few days before the dissolution of this state, Germany refused this guarantee, since all conditions for it laid down at Munich were lacking.

Decides to Intervene

On the contrary, when, after the whole structure of the state had begun to break up and, practically speaking, had already dissolved itself—the German government finally decided also to intervene. It did this only in fulfilment of an obvious duty, for the following point should be noted: On the occasion of the first visit of the Czech foreign minister, M. Chvalkovsky, in Munich, the German government plainly expressed their views on the future of Czecho-Slovakia. I myself assured M. Chvalkovsky on that occasion that, provided loyal treatment was meted out to large German minorities remaining in Czech territory, and provided general appeasement of the whole state was attained, we would guarantee a loyal attitude on the part of Germany and would, for our part, place no obstacles in the way of the state.

But I also made it clear beyond all doubt that if the Czechs were to undertake any steps in line with the political tendencies of Dr. Benes, their former President, Germany would not put up with any development along such lines but would stifle it in its earliest stages. I also pointed out at that time that the maintenance of such a tremendous military arsenal in central Europe for no reason or purpose could only be regarded as a focus of danger.

Later developments proved how justified my warning had been. A continuous and rising tide of underground propaganda and a gradual tendency on the part of Czech newspapers to elapse into the old style of writing made it, finally clear even t o the greatest simpleton that the old state of affairs would soon be restored.

The danger of military conflict was all the greater as there was always the possibility that some madman or other might get control of the vast stores of munitions. This involved the danger of immense explosions. As proof of this, I cannot refrain, gentlemen, from giving you an idea of the gigantic amounts of this international store of explosives in central Europe.

Arms Confiscated

Since occupation of this territory, the following have been confiscated and placed in safekeeping:

Air Force

Airplanes, 1,582; antiaircraft guns, 501.

Army

Guns, light and heavy, 2,175; mine throwers, 785; tanks, 469; machine guns, 43,875; automatic pistols, 114,000; rifles, 1,090,000.

Ammunition

Infantry ammunition, over 1,000,000,000 rounds; shells, over 3,000,000 rounds; other implements of war of all kinds, for example, bridge-building equipment, aircraft detectors, searchlights, measuring instruments, motor vehicles and special motor vehicles, in vast quantities.

I believe it is a good thing for millions and millions of people that I, thanks to the last-minute insight of responsible men on the the other side, succeeded in averting such an explosion and found a solution which I am convinced has finally abolished this problem of a source of danger in central Europe.

The contention that this solution is contrary to the Munich agreement can neither be supported not confirmed. This agreement could under no circumstances be regarded as final because it admitted that other problems required and remained to be solved. We cannot really be reproached for the fact that the parties concerned—and this is the deciding factor—did not turn to the four powers but only to Italy and Germany; nor yet for the fact that the state as such finally split up of its own accord and there, consequently, is no longer any Czecho-Slovakia.

It was, however, understandable that long after the ethnographic principle had been made invalid, Germany should take under her protection her interests dating back a thousand years, which are not only of a political but also of an economic nature.

Not Subject to Supervision

The future will show whether the solution which Germany has found it right or wrong. However, it is certain that the solution is not subject to English supervision or criticism. For Bohemia and Moravia as remnants of former Czecho-Slovakia have nothing more whatever to do with the Munich agreement. Just as English measures in, say northern Ireland, whether they be right or wrong are not subject to German supervision or criticism.

This is also the case with these old German electorates. However, I entirely fail to understand how the agreement reached between Mr. Chamberlain and myself at Munich can refer to this case, for the case of Czecho-Slovakia was settled in the Munich protocol of the four powers as far as it could be settled at all at that time. Apart from this, provision merely was made that if interested parties should fail to come to agreement they should be entitled to appeal to the four powers who had agreed, in such case, to meet for further consultation after expiration of three months.

However, these interested parties did not appeal to the four powers at all, but only to Germany and Italy. That this was fully justified, moreover, is proved by the fact that neither England nor France have raised any objections thereto, but have themselves accepted the decision given by Germany and Italy. No, the agreement reached between Mr. Chamberlain and myself did not relate to this problem, but exclusively to questions which refer to the mutual relationship between England and Germany. This is clearly shown by the fact that such questions are to be treated in the future in the spirit of the Munich agreement and of the Anglo-German naval agreement, that is in a friendly spirit by way of consultation.

Urges Co-operation

If, however, this agreement were to be applied to every future German activity of a political nature, England, too, should not take any step, whether in Palestine or elsewhere, without first consulting Germany. It is obvious we do not expect this, likewise we refuse to gratify any similar expectation of us.

Now, if Mr. Chamberlain concludes from this that the Munich agreement is for this reason annulled, as if we had broken it, then I shall take cognizance of the fact and proceed accordingly. During the whole of my political activity I have always expounded the idea of close friendship and collaboration between Germany and England. In my movement, I found innumerable others of like mind. Perhaps they joined me because of my attitude in this matter. This desire for Anglo-German friendship and co-operation conforms not merely to sentiments which result from the racial origins of our two peoples, but also to my realization of the importance for the whole of mankind of the existence of the British empire.

I have never left room for any doubt of my belief that the existence of this empire is an estimable factor of value for the whole of human cultural and economic life. By whatever means Great Britain has acquired her colonial territories—and I know that they were those of force and often brutality—nevertheless I know full well that no other empire has ever come into being in any other way and that, in the final resort it is not so much the methods that are taken into account in history as the success, and not the success of the methods as such but rather the general good which the methods yield. Now, there is no doubt that the Anglo-Saxon people have accomplished immeasurable colonizing work in the world. For this work I have sincere admiration.

Interests For Both

The thought of destroying this labor appeared and still appears to me, seen from the higher human point of view, as nothing but an effluence of human wanton destructiveness. However, this sincere respect of mine for achievement does not mean foregoing the securing of the life of my own people.

I regard it as impossible to achieve lasting friendship between the German and Anglo-Saxon peoples if the other side does not recognize that there are German as well as British interests, that not only is preservation of the British Empire the meaning and purpose of the lives of Britishers, but also that for Germans, freedom and preservation of the German Reich is their life and purpose.

A genuine lasting friendship between these two nations is conceivable only on the basis of mutual regards. The English people rules a great empire. It built up this empire at a time when the German people was internally weak.

Previously, Germany had been a great empire. At one time she ruled the occident. In bloody struggles and religious dissensions and as a result of internal political disintegration, this empire declined in power and greatness and finally fell into deep sleep. But as this old empire appeared to have reached its end, seeds of its rebirth were springing up. From Brandenburg and Prussia there arose a new Germany, the second Reich, and out of it has grown, at last, the German people's Reich.

No Inferior Feeling

And I hope that all English people understand we do not possess the slightest feeling of inferiority to Britishers. Our historical past is far too tremendous for that.

England has given the world many great men and Germany no fewer. The severe struggle for maintenance of the life of our people has, in the course of three centuries, cost a sacrifice in lives which far exceeds that which other peoples have had to make in asserting their existence.

If Germany, a country that was forever being attacked, was not able to retain her possessions but was compelled to sacrifice many of her provinces, this was due only to her political misdevelopment and her impotence as a result thereof.

That condition has now been overcome. Therefore we Germans do not feel in the least inferior to the British nation. Our self-esteem is just as great as that of an Englishman for England. In the history of our people, now of approximately two thousand years standing, there are occasions and actions enough to fill us with sincere pride.

Now, if England cannot understand our point of view, thinking perchance that she may look upon Germany as a vassal state, then our love and friendly feelings have indeed been wasted on England. We shall not despair or lose heart on that account, but—relying on the consciousness of our own strength and on the strength of our friends—we shall then find ways and means to secure our independence without impairing our dignity.

Refers to Naval Pact

I have heard the statement of the British prime minister to the effect that he is not able to put any trust in German assurances. Under the circumstances, I consider it a matter of course that we no longer wish to expect him or the British people to bear the burden of a situation which is only conceivable in an atmosphere of mutual confidence. When Germany became National Socialist and thus paved the way for her national resurrection in pursuance of my unswerving policy of friendship with England of my own accord, I made the proposal for voluntary restriction of German naval armaments. That restriction was, however, based on one condition, namely, the will and conviction that war between England and Germany would never again be possible. This wish, this conviction, are alive in me today.

«I am now, however, compelled to state that the policy of England is both unofficially and officially leaving no doubt about the fact that such a conviction is no longer shared in London and that, on the contrary, opinion prevails there that no matter in what conflict Germany should some day be entangled, Great Britain would always have to take her stand against Germany. Thus war against Germany is taken for granted in that country. I most profoundly regret such a development for the only claim I have ever made and shall continue to make on England is that for return of our colonies. But I always made it very clear that this would never become a cause of military conflict. I have always held that the English, to whom these colonies are of no value, would one day understand the German situation and would then value German friendship higher than the possession of territories which, while yielding no real profit whatever to them, are of vital importance to Germany.

Plans Communication

Apart from this, however, I have never advanced a claim which might in any way have interfered with British interests or have become a danger to the empire and thus have meant any damage to England. I have always kept within the limit of such demands as are intimately connected with Germany's living space and thus the eternal property of the German nation.

Since England today, by press and officially, upholds the view that Germany should be opposed under all circumstances and confirms this policy of encirclement known to us, the basis for the naval treaty has been removed. I have therefore resolved to send today a communication to this effect to the British government.

This is to us not a matter of practical material importance—for I still hope that we shall be able to avoid an armaments race with England—but an action of self-respect. Should the British government, however, wish to enter once more into negotiations with Germany on this problem, no one would be happier than I at the prospect of still being able to a come to a clear and straightforward understanding:

Moreover, I know my people—and I rely on them. We do not want anything that did not formerly belong to us, and no state will ever be robbed by us of its property; but whoever believes that he is able to attack Germany will find himself confronted with a measure of power and resistance compared with which that of 1914 was negligible.

In connection with this I wish to speak at once of that matter which was chosen by the same circles who caused the mobilization of Czecho-Slovakia as the starting point for a new campaign against the Reich.

Discusses Memel

I have already assured you, gentlemen, at the beginning of my speech, that never either in the case of Austria or in the case of Czecho-Slovakia, have I adopted in my political life any attitude which is not compatible with events which have now happened. I therefore pointed out in connection with the problem of Memel Germans that this question, if it was not solved by Lithuania herself in a dignified and generous manner, would one day have to be raised by Germany herself.

You know that the Memel territory was also once torn from the Reich quite arbitrarily by the dictate of Versailles and that finally in the year 1923, that is, already in the midst of a period of complete peace, this territory was occupied by Lithuania and thus more or less confiscated. The fate of Germans has since then been real martyrdom.

In the course of the reincorporation of Bohemia and Moravia within the framework of the German Reich it was also possible for me to come to an agreement with the Lithuanian government which allowed return of this territory to Germany without any act of violence and without shedding blood. Also, in this instance, I have not demanded one square mile more than we formerly possessed and which was stolen from us.

This means, therefore, only that territory has returned to the German Reich which had been torn from us by the madmen who dictated peace at Versailles. But this solution, I am convinced, will only prove advantageous to relations between Germany and Lithuania, seeing that Germany, as our behavior has proved, has no other interest than to live in peace and friendship with this state and to establish and foster economic relations with it. In this connection, I wish to make one point perfectly clear:

Wants Good Relations

The significance of the economic agreements with Germany lies not only in the fact Germany is able as an exporter to meet almost all industrial requirements, but she, being a very large consumer, is, at same time, also a purchaser of numerous products which alone enable other countries to participate in international trade at all.

We are interested not only in retaining these economic markets but especially in promoting good relations with them because the existence of our people is based to a large extent thereon. So-called democratic statesmen look upon it as one of their greatest political achievements to exclude a nation from its markets, for, example, by boycott, so, as I presume, to starve it out. I need not assure you I am convinced that a nation would fight rather than starve under such circumstances. As far as Germany is concerned, she is, in any case, determined not to allow certain economically important markets to be stolen from her by terroristic intervention or threats.

This, however, is not only in our own interest, but also in the interest of our trade partner. Here, as in every business, it is not one-sided, but mutual dependency. How often do we have the pleasure of reading in the amateurish economic articles of our democratic newspapers that Germany, because she maintains close economic relations with a country, makes that country dependent upon her? This is sheer harassing, Jewish nonsense. For if Germany supplies an agrarian country today with machines and receives foodstuffs in payment, the Reich, as a consumer of foodstuffs, is at least as dependent, if not more dependent, on the agrarian country as the latter is dependent on us from whom it receives industrial products in payment.

Germany regards the Baltic states as one of its most important trade partners. And for this reason it is in our interest that these countries should lead an independent, ordered national life of their own.

This is, in our opinion, a necessary condition for that internal economic development which is again the condition upon which exchange of goods depends.

Humanitarians Grieved

I am, therefore, happy that we have been able to dispose also of the point of dispute between Lithuania and Germany. For this does away with the only obstacle in the way of the policy of friendship which can prove its worth—as I am convinced it will —not in political compliments but in practical economic measures. The democratic world, it is true, was once more extremely sorry that there was no bloodshed—that 175,000 Germans were able to return to the homeland which they loved above everything else, without the few hundred thousands of others having to be shot for it.

This grieved the apostles of humanitarianism deeply. It was, therefore, no wonder that they immediately began to look out for new possibilities of bringing about a thorough disturbance of the European atmosphere after all. And so, as in the case of Czecho-Slovakia, they again resorted to the assertion that Germany was taking military steps, that it was supposedly mobilizing. This mobilization was said to be directed against Poland.

There is little to be said as regards German-Polish relations. Here, too, the peace treaty of Versailles—of course, intentionally—inflicted the most severe wound on Germany.

The strange way in which the corridor giving Poland access to the sea was marked out was meant, above all, to prevent for all time the establishment of an understanding between Poland and Germany. This problem is, as I have already stressed, perhaps the most painful of all problems for Germany.

Nevertheless, I never have ceased to uphold the view that the necessity of free access to the sea for the Polish state cannot be ignored and that is a general principle valid for this case, too. Nations which Providence has destined or, if you like, condemned to live side by side, would be well advised not to make life still harder for each other, artificially and unnecessarily. The late Marshal Pilsudski, who was of the same opinion, was therefore prepared to go into the question of clarifying the atmosphere of German-Polish relations and finally to conclude an agreement whereby Germany and Poland expressed their intention of renouncing war altogether as a means of settling questions which concerned them both.

Danzig a Reich City

This agreement contained one single exception which was in practice conceded to Poland. It was laid down that pacts of mutual assistance already entered into by Poland—this applied to a pact with France—should not be affected by the agreement. But it was obvious that this could apply only to a pact of mutual assistance already concluded beforehand and not to whatever new pacts might be concluded in the future.

It is a fact that the German-Polish agreement resulted in remarkable lessening of European tension. Nevertheless, there remained one open question between Germany and Poland which sooner or later quite naturally had to be solved—the question of the German city of Danzig.

Danzig is a German city and wishes to belong to Germany. On the other hand this city has contracts with Poland which were admittedly forced upon it by the dictators of the peace of Versailles. But, since moreover, the League of Nations, formerly the greatest stirrer-up of trouble, is now represented by a high commissioner—incidentally a man of extraordinary tact—the problem of Danzig must in any case come up for discussion at the latest with the gradual extinction of this calamitous institution.

I regard peaceful settlement of this problem as a further contribution to the final loosening of European tension. For this loosening of tension is assuredly not to be achieved through agitations of insane war-mongers, but through removal of real elements of danger

Refers to Offer

After the problem of Danzig already had been discussed several times some months ago, I made a concrete offer to the Polish government. I now make this offer known to you, gentlemen, and you yourselves will judge whether this offer did not represent the greatest imaginable concession in the interests of European peace. As I have already pointed out, I have always seen the necessity of access to sea for this country and have consequently taken this necessity into consideration. I am no democratic statesman but National Socialist and realist.

I considered it, however, necessary to make it clear to the government in Warsaw that just as they desire access to sea, so Germany needs access to her province in the east. Now these are all difficult problems.

It was not Germany who was responsible for them, however, but rather the jugglers of Versailles who, either in their maliciousness or their thoughtlessness, placed 100 powder barrels round about in Europe all equipped with hardly extinguishable lighted fuses.

These problems cannot be solved according to old-fashioned ideas; I think rather that we should adopt new methods.

No Military Importance

Poland's access to the sea by way of the Corridor and, on the other hand, a German route through the Corridor have no kind of military importance whatsoever. Their importance is exclusively psychological and economic. To afford military importance to a traffic route of this kind would be to show one's self completely ignorant of military affairs. Consequently, I have had the following proposal submitted to the Polish government:

1. Danzig returns as a free state into the framework of the German Reich;

2. Germany receives a route through the corridor and a railway line at her own disposal possessing the same extra-territorial status for Germany as the corridor itself has for Poland.

In return, Germany is prepared:

1. To recognize all Polish economic rights in Danzig;

2. To insure for Poland a free harbor in Danzig of any size desired which would have completely free access to sea;

3. To accept at the same time the present boundaries between Poland and Germany and to regard them as ultimate.

4. To conclude a 25-year non-aggression treaty with Poland, the treaty, therefore, which would extend far beyond the duration of my own life, and

5. To guarantee the independence of the Slovak state by Germany, Poland and Hungary jointly—which means, in practice, renunciation of any unilateral German hegemony in this territory.

Offer Rejected

The Polish government has rejected my one and only offer and has only declared it is prepared to:

1. Negotiate concerning the question of a substitute for the commissioner of the League of Nations and

2. To consider facilities for the transit of traffic through the Corridor.

I have regretted dearly this incomprehensible attitude of the Polish government but that alone is not the decisive fact; the worst is that now Poland, like Czecho-Slovakia a year ago, believes, under pressure of a lying international campaign, that it must call up troops although Germany on her part has not called up a single man and had not thought of proceeding in any way against Poland. As I have said, this is in itself very regrettable and posterity will one day decide whether it was really right to refuse this suggestion, made this once by me. This—as I have said —was an endeavor on my part to solve a question which ultimately affects the German people by truly unique compromise and to solve it to the advantage of both countries.

According to my conviction, Poland was not a giving party in this solution at all but only a receiving party because it should be beyond all doubt that Danzig will never become Polish. An intention to attack on part of Germany, which was merely invented by the international press, led as you know, to a so-called guarantee offer and to the obligation on the part of the Polish government for mutual assistance which would also under certain circumstances compel Poland to take military action against Germany in the event of conflict between Germany and any other power and in which England, in her turn, would be involved. This obligation is contradictory to the agreement which I made with Marshal Pilsudski some time ago, seeing that in this agreement reference is made exclusively to existing obligations, that is, at that time, namely, to obligations of Poland towards France of which we were aware. To extend this obligations subsequently is contrary to the terms of the German-Polish non-aggression pact.

Under these circumstances I should not have entered into this pact at that time because what sense can non-aggression pacts have if one partner in practice leaves open an enormous number of exceptions?

There is either collective security, that is, collective insecurity and continuous danger of war, or clear agreements which, however, exclude fundamentally any use of arms between contracting parties.

Holds Pact Voided

Therefore I look upon the agreement which Marshal Pilsudski and I at one time concluded as having been unilaterally infringed by Poland and thereby no longer in existence.

I have sent a communication to this effect to the Polish government. However, I can only repeat at this point that my decision does not constitute modification of my attitude in principle with regard to problems mentioned above. Should the Polish government wish to come to fresh contractual arrangements governing its relations with Germany, I can but welcome such an idea, provided, of course, that these arrangements are based on an absolutely clear obligation binding both parties in equal measure.

Germany is perfectly willing at any time to undertake such obligations, and also to fulfill them. If for these reasons fresh unrest has broken out in Europe during the last few weeks, responsibility therefor lies solely in propaganda in the service of international warmongers which, we know well, and which, conducted by numerous organs of democratic states, endeavors by continually increasing nervousness and inventing continual rumors to make Europe ripe for catastrophe—that catastrophe from which it is hoped to achieve what has not yet been brought about, namely, Bolshevik destruction of European civilization.

Hate of these mischiefmakers is more readily understood as they were deprived of one of the greatest danger spots of European crisis thanks to the heroism of one man, his nation and—I may say—also thanks to Italian and German volunteers.

Pleased Over Victory

In past weeks Germany has experienced and celebrated the victory of Nationalist Spain with most fervent sympathy. As I resolved to answer the plea of Gen. Franco to give him the assistance of National Socialist Germany in countering international support of Bolshevik incendiaries, this step of Germany's was misinterpreted and abused in a most infamous way by these same international agitators.

They declared at the time that Germany intended to establish herself in Spain and proposed taking Spanish colonies, indeed, the landing of 20,000 soldiers in Morocco was invented as an infamous lie. In short, nothing was omitted that could cast suspicion on the idealism of our and Italian support in order to find material for fresh war-mongering. In a few weeks now, the victorious hero of Nationalist Spain will celebrate his festive entry into the capital of his country.

The Spanish people will acclaim him as their deliverer from unspeakable horrors and as their liberator from bands of incendiaries who are estimated to have more than 775,000 human lives on their conscience through executions and murders alone.

Inhabitants of whole villages and towns literally were butchered under the silent, benevolent patronage of west European and American democratic humanitarian apostles.

In this, his triumphal procession volunteers of our German legion will march together with their Italian comrades in the ranks of valiant Spanish soldiers. We hope to be able to welcome them home soon afterward. The German nation will then know how bravely its sons have played their part on that soil, too, in the struggle for liberty of a noble people and therewith for the salvation of European civilization; for if sub-human forces of Bolshevism had proved victorious in Spain they might easily have spread across the whole of Europe.

The hatred of those who are disappointed that Europe did once more go up in fire flames. And for this reason they are doubly anxious to miss no opportunity of sowing seeds of mistrust among nations and stirring up somewhere else a war atmosphere which they so much desire.

Assails War-Mongers

Things which these international war-mongers have in past few weeks fabricated in lying assertions and published in numerous newspapers are, in part, just as childish as they are malicious.

The first result inasfar as this is not intended to serve internal political purposes of democratic governments is the spreading of nervous hysteria which already considers the landing of inhabitants of Mars in the land of unlimited possibilities. The real purpose, however, is to prepare public opinion to regard the English policy of encirclement as necessary and, consequently, to support it should worst come to worst.

The German people, on the other hand, can go about their business with perfect tranquility. Their frontiers are guarded by the best army in the history of Germany, the air above is protected by the most powerful air fleet and our coasts are rendered unassailable by any enemy power. In the west, the strongest defensive work of all times has been built. But the deciding factors are the unity of the Germans as a whole, the confidence of all Germans in one another and in their fighting forces and—I may say—the faith of all in their leadership.

But the trust of the leader and the people in our friends is not less. And at the head of the latter is the state which is closest to us in every respect as a result of common destinies which unite us. In this year again Fascist Italy has shown greatest understanding for rightful German interests. No one need be surprised if we, for our part have the same feelings towards Italian necessities for existence. The bond which unites our two peoples is unbreakable. Any attempt to throw doubt on this fact appears to us ridiculous.

Albanian Move Approved

In any case, it is best illustrated and explained in an article which appeared a few days ago in a leading democratic newspaper which stated that it should be no longer regarded as possible to separate Italy and Germany so as to destroy them separately.

Thus, the German government, in full understanding, appreciates the right of action taken by their Italian friend in Albania and have therefore, welcomed it. Yes, it not only was right but also was a duty of Fascism to secure living space undoubtedly allotted to Italy by nature and history and maintenance of order, on which alone a really flourishing human civilization appears to be based.

After all, there can be just as little doubt in the rest of the world concerning the civilizing work of fascism as there is about that of national socialism.

In both instances, indisputable facts are testimony against the unfounded brag and unproved statements of the other side. To create still closer relations between Germany, Italy and Japan is the constant aim of the German government. We regard the existence and maintenance of the freedom and independence of these three great powers as the strongest factor in the future making for preservation of a true human culture, a practical civilization and just order the world.

As mentioned at the beginning, the world on April 15, 1939, was informed of the contents of a telegram which I myself did not see until later. It is difficult to classify this document or to arrange it in any known scheme. I will therefore, endeavor before you, gentlemen, and thus before the whole German people, to analyze necessary answers in your name and in that of German people.

By the Associated Press.

The following is the text of that part of Chancellor Hitler's speech in which he answered President Roosevelt's peace appeal point by point.

I.

Mr. Roosevelt is of the opinion that I, too, must realize that throughout the world hundreds of millions of human beings are living in constant fear of a new war or even a series of wars.

This, he says, is of concern to the people of the United States for whom he speaks, as it must also be to the peoples of the other nations of the entire Western Hemisphere.

In reply to this it must be said in the first place that this fear of war has undoubtedly existed among mankind from time immemorial, and justifiably so.

For instance, after the peace Treaty of Versailles, 14 wars were waged between 1919 and 1938 alone, in none of which Germany was concerned, but in which the states of the "Western Hemisphere" in whose name President Roosevelt also speaks, were indeed concerned.

In addition, there were in the same period 26 violent interventions and sanctions carried through by means of bloodshed and force.

Germany also played no part whatever in these. The United States alone has carried out military intervention in six cases since 1918. Since 1918 Soviet Russia has engaged in 10 wars and military actions involving force and bloodshed.

Again Germany was concerned in none of these, nor was she the cause of any of these events. It would therefore be a mistake in my eyes to assume that the fear of war inspiring European and non-European nations can at this present time be directly traced back to actual wars at all.

II.

The reason for this fear lies simply and solely in an unbridled agitation on the part of the press, an agitation as mendacious as it is base, in the circulation of vile pamphlets about the heads of foreign states, and in an artificial spreading of panic which in the end goes so far that interventions from another planet are believed possible and cause scenes of desperate alarm.

I believe that as soon as the responsible governments impose upon themselves and their journalistic organs the necessary restraint and truthfulness as regards the relations of the various countries to one another, and in particular as regards internal happenings in other countries, the fear of war will disappear at once and the tranquillity which we all desire so much will become possible.

In his telegram Mr. Roosevelt expresses the belief that every major war, even if it were to be confined to other continents, must have serious consequences while it lasts, and also for generations to come.

The answer: No one knows this better than the German people. For the peace treaty of Versailles imposed burdens on the German people which could not have been paid off even in 100 years, although it has been proved precisely by American teachers of constitutional law, historians and professors of history that Germany was no more to blame for the outbreak of the war than any other nation.

But I do not believe that every conflict must have disastrous consequences for the whole surrounding world, that is for the whole globe, provided the whole world is not systematically drawn into such conflicts by means of network of nebulous pact obligations.

For since in past centuries and —as I pointed out at the beginning of my answer—also in the course of the last decades, the world has experienced a continuous series of wars, if Mr. Roosevelt's assumptions were correct humanity would already have a burden, in the sum total of the outcome of all these wars, which it would have to bear for millions of years to come.

III.

Mr. Roosevelt declared that he had already appealed to me on a former occasion on behalf of a peaceful settlement of political, economic and social problems and without resort to arms.

The answer: I myself have always been an exponent of this view and, as history proves, have settled necessary political, economic and social problems without force of arms, that is, without resort to arms.

Unfortunately, however, this peaceful settlement has been made more difficult by the agitation of politicians, statesmen and newspaper representatives who were neither directly concerned nor even affected by the problems in question.

IV.

Mr. Roosevelt believes that the "tide of events" is once more bringing the threat of arms with it, and that if this threat continues a large part of the world is condemned to a common ruin.

The answer: As far as Germany is concerned, I know nothing of this kind of threat to other nations, although I every day read in the democratic newspapers lies about such a threat.

Every day I read of German mobilizations, of the landing of troops, of extortions—all this in regard to states with whom we are, in many cases, the closest friends.

V.

Mr. Roosevelt believes further that in case of war victorious, vanquished and neutral nations will all suffer.

The answer: As a politician I have been the exponent of this conviction for 20 years, at a time when, unfortunately, the responsible statesmen in America could not bring themselves to make the same admission as regards their participation in the Great War and its issue.

VI.

Mr. Roosevelt believes lastly that it lies with the leaders of the great nations to preserve their peoples from the impending disaster.

The answer: If that is true, then it is a punishable neglect, to use no worse word, if the leaders of nations with corresponding powers are not capable of controlling their newspapers which are agitating for war, and so to save the world from the threatening calamity of an armed conflict.

I am not able to understand, further, why these responsible leaders instead of cultivating diplomatic relations between nations, make them more difficult and indeed disturb them by recalling ambassadors, etcetera, without any reason.

VII.

Mr. Roosevelt declared that three nations in Europe and one in Africa have seen their independent existence terminated.

The answer: I do not know which three nations in Europe are meant. Should it be a question of the provinces reincorporated in the German Reich I must draw the attention of Mr. Roosevelt to a historical error.

It is not now that these nations sacrificed their independent existence in Europe, but rather in 1918 when they, contrary to solemn promises, were separated from their communities and made into nations which they never wished to be and never were, and when they had forced upon them an independence which was no independence but at the most could only mean dependence upon an international foreign world which they hated.

As for the fact however, that one nation in Africa is alleged to have lost its freedom—that, too, is but an error; for it is not a question of one nation in Africa having lost its freedom—on the contrary practically all the previous inhabitants of this continent have been made subject to the sovereignty of other nations by bloody force, thereby losing their freedom.

Moroccans, Berbers, Arabs, Négroes, etc., have all fallen victim to foreign might, the swords of which, however, were inscribed not "Made in Germany," but "Made by Democracies."

VIII.

Mr. Roosevelt then speaks of the reports which admittedly he does not believe to be correct, but which state that further acts of aggression are contemplated against still other independent nations.

The answer: I consider every such unfounded insinuation as an offense against the tranquillity and consequently the peace of the world. I also see therein something which tends to frighten smaller nations or at least make them nervous.

If Mr. Roosevelt really has any specific instances in mind in this connection I would ask him to name the states which are threatened with aggression and to name the aggressor in question. It will then be possible to refute these monstrous general accusations by brief statements.

IX

Mr. Roosevelt states that the world is plainly moving toward the moment when this situation must end in catastrophe unless a rational way of guiding events is found.

He also declares that I have repeatedly asserted that I and the German people have no desire for war and that if this is true there need be no war.

The answer: I wish to point out, firstly, that I have not conducted any war; secondly, that for years past I have expressed my abhorrence of war and, it is true, also my abhorrence of warmongers, and, thirdly, that I am not aware for what purpose I should wage a war at all. I should be thankful to Mr. Roosevelt if he would give me some explanation in this connection.

X

Mr. Roosevelt is finally of the opinion that the peoples of the earth could not be persuaded that any governing power has any right or need to inflict the consequences of war on its own or any other people save in the cause of self-evident home defense.

The answer: I should think that every reasonable human being is of this opinion, but it seems to me that in almost every war both sides claim a case of unquestionable home defense, and that there is no institution in this world, including the American President himself, which could clear up this problem unequivocally. There is hardly any doubt, for example, that America's entry into the Great War was not a case of unquestionable home defense. A research committee set up by President Roosevelt himself has examined the causes of America's entry into the Great War, and reached the conclusion that the entry ensued chiefly for exclusively capitalistic reasons. Nevertheless, no practical conclusions have been drawn from this fact.

Let us hope then that at least the United States will in the future itself act according to this noble principle, and will not go to war against any country except in the case of unquestionable home defense.

XI.

Mr. Roosevelt says further that he does not speak from selfishness nor fear nor weakness, but with the voice of strength and friendship for mankind.

The answer: If this voice of strength and friendship for mankind had been raised by America at the proper time, and if above all it had possessed some practical value, then at least there could have been prevented that treaty which has become the source of direst derangement of humanity and history, namely the dictate of Versailles.

XII.

Mr. Roosevelt declares further that it is clear to him that all international problems can be solved at the council table.

The answer: Theoretically one ought to believe in this possibility, for common sense would correct demands on the one hand and show the compelling necessity of a compromise on the other.

For example, according to all common sense logic and the general principles of a higher human justice, indeed according to the laws of a divine will, all peoples ought to have an equal share of the goods of this world.

It ought not then to happen that one people needs so much living space that it cannot get along with 15 inhabitants to the square kilometer, while others are forced to nourish 140, 150 or even 200 on the same area.

But in no case should these fortunate peoples curtail the existing living space of those who are, as it is, suffering, by robbing them of their colonies, for instance. I would therefore be very happy if these problems could really find their solution at the council table.

My skepticism, however, is based on the fact that it was America herself who gave sharpest expression to her mistrust in the effectiveness of conferences. For the greatest conference of all time was without any doubt the League of Nations.

That authoritative body representing all the peoples of the world, created in accordance with the will of an American President, was supposed to solve the problems of humanity at the council table.

The first state, however, that shrank from this endeavor was the United States—the reason being that President Wilson himself even then nourished the greatest doubts of the possibility of really being able to solve decisive international problems at the conference table.

We honor your well-meant opinion, Mr. Roosevelt, but opposed to your opinion stands the actual fact that in almost 20 years of the activity of the greatest conference in the world, namely, the League of Nations, it has proved impossible to solve one single decisive international problem.

Contrary to Wilson's promise, Germany was hindered for many years by the peace treaty of Versailles from participating in this great world conference. In spite of the most bitter experience, one German government believed that there was no need to follow the example of the United States, and that they should therefore take their seat at this conference table.

It was not till after years of purposeless participation that I resolved to follow the example of America and likewise leave the largest conference in the world. Since then I have solved the problems concerning my people which like all others were, unfortunately, not solved at the conference table of the League of Nations—and, too, without recourse to war in any case.

Apart from this, however, as already mentioned, numerous other problems have been brought before world conferences in recent years without any solution having been found.

If, however, Mr. Roosevelt, your belief that every problem can be solved at the conference table is true, then all nations, including the United States, have been led in the past 700 or 800 years either by blind men or by criminals.

For all of them, including the statesmen of the United States and especially her greatest, did not make the chief part of their history at the conference table but with the aid of the strength of their people.

The freedom of North America was not achieved at the conference table any more than the conflict between the North and the South was decided there. I will say nothing about the innumerable struggles which finally led to the subjugation of the North American continent as a whole.

I mention all this only in order to show that your view, Mr. Roosevelt, although undoubtedly deserving of all honor, finds no confirmation in the history either of your own country or of the rest of the world.

XIII

Mr. Roosevelt continues that it is no answer to the plea for peaceful discussion for one side to plead that unless they receive assurances beforehand that the verdict will be theirs not to lay aside their arms.

The answer: do you believe, Mr. Roosevelt, that when the final fate of nations is in the balance, a government or the leaders of a people will lay down their arms or surrender them before a conference, simply in the blind hope that in their wisdom or if you like, their discernment, the other members of the conference will arrive at the right conclusion?

Mr. Roosevelt, there has been only one country and one government which have acted according to the recipe extolled in such glowing terms, and that country was Germany. The German nation once, trusting in the solemn assurances of the President Wilson and in the confirmation of these assurances by the allies, laid down its arms and thus went unarmed to the conference table.

It is true that as soon as the German nation had laid down its arms it was not even invited to the conference table, but in violation of all assurances, was made to suffer the worst breaking of a word that had ever been known.

Then one day, instead of the greatest confusion known in history being resolved around the conference table, the cruellest dictated treaty in the world brought about a still more fearful confusion.

But the representatives of the German nation, who, trusting to the solemn assurances of an American President, had laid down their arms and therefore appeared unarmed, were not received, even when they came to accept the terms of the dictated treaty, as the representatives of a nation which at all events had held out with infinite heroism against a whole world for four years in the struggle for its liberty and independence; they were subjected to ever greater degradations than can ever have been inflicted on the chieftains of Sioux tribes.

The German delegates were insulted by the mob, stones were thrown at them, and they were dragged like prisoners, not to the council table of the world, but, before the tribunal of the victors; and there, at the pistol's point, they were forced to undergo the most shameful subjection and plundering that the world had ever known.

I can assure you, Mr. Roosevelt, that I am steadfastly determined to see to it that not only now, but for all future time, no German shall ever enter a conference defenseless, but that at all time and forever every German negotiator should and shall have behind him the united strength of the German nation, so help me God.

XIV.

The President of the United States believes that in conference rooms as in courts, it is necessary that both sides enter in good faith, assuming that substantial justice will accrue to both.

The answer: German representatives will never again enter a conference that is for them a tribunal. For who is to be the judge there? At a conference there is no accused and no prosecutor, but two contending parties. And if their own good sense does not bring about a settlement between the two parties, they will never surrender themselves to the verdict of disinterested foreign powers.

Incidentally, the United States itself declined to enter the League of Nations and to become the victim of a court which was able by a majority vote to give a verdict against individual interests. But I should be grateful to President Roosevelt if he would explain to the world what the new World Court is to be like.

Who are the judges here, according to what procedure are they selected, and on what responsibility do they act? And above all, to whom can they be made to account for their decision?

XV.

Mr. Roosevelt believes that the cause of world peace would be greatly advanced if the nations of the world were to give a frank statement relating to the present and future policy of their governments.

The answer: I have already done this, Mr. Roosevelt, in innumerable public speeches. And in the course of this present meeting of the German Reichstag, I have again—as far as this is possible in the space of two hours—made a statement of this kind.

I must, however, decline to give such an explanation to anyone else than to the people for whose existence and life I am responsible, and who on the other hand alone have the right to demand that I account to them. However, I give the aims of the German policy so openly that the entire world can hear it in any case.

But these explanations are without significance for the outside world as long as it is possible for the press to falsify and suspect every statement, to question it or to cover it with fresh lying replies.

XVI

Mr. Roosevelt believes that, because the United States as one of the nations of the Western Hemisphere is not involved in the immediate controversies which have arisen in Europe, I should, therefore, be willing to make such a statement of policy to him, as the head of a nation so far removed from Europe.

The answer: Mr. Roosevelt, therefore, seriously believes that the cause of international peace would really be furthered if I were to make to the nations of the world a public statement on the present policy of the German government.

But how does Mr. Roosevelt come to expect of the head of the German state above all to make a statement without the other governments being invited to make such a statement of their policy as well?

I certainly believe that it is not feasible to make such a statement to the head of any foreign state, but rather that such statements should preferably be made to the whole world, in accordance with the demand made at the time by President Wilson, for the abolition of secret diplomacy.

Hitherto, I was not only always prepared to do this, but, as I have already said, I have done it only too often. Unfortunately the most important statements concerning the aims and intentions of German policy have been in many so-called democratic states either withheld from the people or distorted by the press.

If, however, President Roosevelt thinks that he is qualified to address such a request to Germany or Italy of all nations because America is so far removed from Europe, we on our side might with the same right address to the President of the American republic the question as to what aims American foreign policy has in view in its turn.

And on what intentions this policy is based—in the case of the Central and South American states, for instance. In this case Mr. Roosevelt would, rightly, I must admit, refer to the Monroe Doctrine and decline to comply with such a request as an interference in the internal affairs of the American continent. We Germans support a similar doctrine for Europe—and above all for the territory and the interests of the greater German Reich.

Moreover, I would obviously never presume to address such a request to the President of the United States of America, because I assume that he would probably rightly consider such a presumption tactless.

XVII.

The American President further declares that he would then communicate information received by him concerning the political aims of Germany to other nations now apprehensive as to the course of our policy.

The answer: How has Mr. Roosevelt learned which nations consider themselves threatened by German policy and which do not?

Or is Mr. Roosevelt in a position, in spite of the enormous amount of work which must rest upon him in his own country, to recognize of his own accord all these inner spiritual and mental impressions of other peoples and their governments.

XVIII.

Finally, Mr. Roosevelt asks that assurance be given him that the German armed forces will not attack, and above all not invade, the territory or possessions of the following independent nations. He then names as those coming into question: Finland, Latvia, Estonia, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, the Netherlands, Belgium, Great Britain, Ireland, France, Portugal, Spain, Switzerland, Leichtenstein, Luxemburg, Poland, Hungary, Turkey, Iraq, the Arabias, Syria, Palestine, Egypt and Iran.

The answer: I have first taken the trouble to ascertain from the states mentioned firstly whether they feel themselves threatened, and secondly and above all whether this inquiry by the American President was addressed to us at their suggestion or at any rate with their consent.

The reply was in all cases negative, in some instances strongly so. It is true that I could not cause inquiries to be made of certain of the states and nations mentioned because they themselves—as for example Syria—are at present not in possession of their freedom, but are occupied and consequently deprived of their rights by the military agents of democratic states.

Apart form this fact, however, all states bordering on Germany have received much more binding assurances and above all suggestions than Mr. Roosevelt asked from me in his curious telegram.

But should there be any doubt as to the value of these general and direct statements which I have so often made, than any further statement of this kind, even if addressed to the American President, would be equally worthless. For ultimately it is not the value which Mr. Roosevelt attaches to such statements which is decisive, but the value attached to these statements by the countries in question.

But I must also draw Mr. Roosevelt's attention to one or two historical errors. He mentions Ireland, for instance, and asks for a statement to the effect that Germany will not attack Ireland. Now I have just read a speech delivered by De Valera, the Irish taoiseach (prime minister), in which strangely enough and contrary to Mr. Roosevelt's opinion, he does not charge Germany with oppressing Ireland, but reproaches England with subjecting Ireland to continuous aggression at her hands.

With all due respect to Mr. Roosevelt's insight into the needs and cares of other countries, it may, nevertheless, be assured that the Irish taoiseach will be more familiar with the dangers which threaten his country than the President of the United States.

In the same way, the fact has obviously escaped Mr. Roosevelt's notice that Palestine is at present occupied, not by German troops, but by the English; and that the country is having its liberty restricted by the most brutal resort to force, is being robbed of its independence and is suffering the cruellest maltreatment for the benefit of Jewish interlopers.

The Arabs living in that country will, therefore, certainly not have complained to Mr. Roosevelt of German aggression, but they do voice a continuous appeal to the world, deploring the barbarous methods with which England is attempting to suppress a people which loves its freedom and is but defending it.

This, too, is perhaps a problem which would have to be solved at the conference table, that is, in the presence of a just judge, and not by physical force, military means, mass executions, burning down villages, blowing up houses, and so on. For one fact is undoubtedly certain: In this case England is not defending herself against a threatened Arab attack, but as an interloper, and, without being called upon to do so, is endeavoring to establish her power in a foreign territory which does not belong to her.

A whole series of similar errors which Mr. Roosevelt has made might be pointed out, quite apart from the difficulty of military operations on the part of Germany in states and countries, some of which are 2,000 and 5,000 kilometers away from us. In conclusion, however, I have the following statement to make:

The German government is nevertheless prepared to give each of the states named an assurance of the kind desired by Mr. Roosevelt on the condition of absolute reciprocity, provided that the state wishes it and itself addresses to Germany a request for such an assurance together with appropriate proposals. As concerns a number of the states included in Mr. Roosevelt's list, this question can probably be regarded as settled from the very start, since we are already either allied with them or at least united by close ties of friendship.

As for the duration of these agreements, Germany is willing to make terms with each individual state in accordance with the wishes of that state.

But I should not like to let this opportunity pass without giving above all to the President of the United States an assurance regarding those territories which would after all give him most cause for apprehension, namely, the United States itself and the other states of the American continent.

And I here solemnly declare that all the assertions which have been circulated in any way concerning an intended German attack or invasion on or in American territory are rank frauds and gross untruths. Quite apart from the fact that such assertions, as far as the military possibilities are concerned, could have their origin only in a stupid imagination.

XIX

The American President then goes on to declare in this connection that he regards the discussion of the most effective and immediate manner in which the peoples of the world can obtain relief from the crushing burden of armaments, as the most important factor of all.

Mr. Roosevelt perhaps does not know that this problem insofar as it concerns Germany has already been completely solved on one occasion. Between 1919 and 1923 Germany had already completely disarmed—as was expressly confirmed by the Allied commissions—the extent of this disarmament being as follows:

The following military equipment was destroyed:

1. 50,000 guns and barrels.
2. 130,000 machine guns.
3. 31,000 minenwerfer (minethrowers) and barrels.
4. 6,007,000 rifles and carbines.
5. 243,000 machine-gun barrels.
6. 28,000 gun carriages.
7. 4,390 minenwerfer carriages.
8. 38,750,000 shells.
9. 16,550,000 hand and rifle grenades.
10. 60,400,000 rounds live ammunition.
11. 491,000,000 rounds small caliber ammunition.
12. 335,000 metric tons shell jackets.
13. 23,515 metric tons cartridge cases.
14. 37,600 metric tons powder.
15. 79,000 unfilled rounds of ammunition.
16. 212,000 sets telephone apparatus.
17. 1,072 flame throwers, et cetera.

There were further destroyed:

Sleighs, transportable workshops, antiaircraft carriages, gun carriages, steel helmets, gasmasks, munitions industry, machinery and rifle barrels.

The following airforce equipment was destroyed: (1) 15,714 fighters and bombers, (2) 27,757 aeroplane engines.

While in the navy, the following was destroyed: 26 capital ships, 4 coastal defense vessels, 4 armored cruisers, 19 small cruisers, 21 training and other special ships, 83 torpedo boats and 315 submarines.

In addition the following were destroyed:

Vehicles of all kinds, poison gas and (partly) antigas apparatus, fuel and explosives, searchlights, sighting apparatus, distance and sound measuring apparatus, optical instruments of all kinds, harness et cetera, all aerodromes and airship hangars et cetera.

According to the solemn pledges once given Germany, pledges which found their confirmation even in the Peace Treaty of Versailles, all this was supposed to be an advance payment which would then make it possible for the rest of the world to disarm without danger.

In this point as in all others where Germany believed that a promise would be kept she was disgracefully deceived. All attempts to induce the other states to disarm, pursued in negotiations at the conference table over many years, came, as is well known, to nothing. This disarmament would have been but the execution of pledges already given and at the same time just and prudent. I, myself, Mr. Roosevelt, have made any number of practical proposals for consultation and tried to bring about a discussion of them in order to make possible a general limitation of armaments to the lowest possible level.

I proposed a maximum strength for all armies of 200,000, similarly the abolition of all offensive weapons, of bombing planes, of poison gas, etc. It was not possible, however, to carry out these plans in the face of the rest of the world, although Germany herself was at the time completely disarmed. I then proposed a maximum of 300,000 for armies.

The proposal met with the same negative reception. I then submitted a great number of detailed disarmament proposals—in each case before the forum of the German Reichstag and consequently before the whole world. It never occurred to anyone even to discuss the matter. The rest of the world began instead to increase still further their already enormous armaments.

And not until 1934 when the last of my comprehensive proposals—that concerning 300,000 as the maximum size of the army—was ultimately turned down did I give the order for German rearmament which was now to be very thorough.

Nevertheless, I do not want to be an obstacle in the way of disarmament discussions at which you, Mr. Roosevelt, intend to be present. I would ask you, however, not to appeal first to me and to Germany but rather to the others; I have a long line of practical experience behind me, and shall remain sceptically inclined until reality has taught me to know better.

XX.

Mr. Roosevelt gives us his pledge finally that he is prepared to take part in discussions looking toward the most practical manner of opening up avenues of international trade to the end that every nation of the world may be enabled to buy and sell on equal terms in the world's market, as well as to possess assurances of obtaining the raw materials and products of peaceful economic life.

The answer, it is my belief, Mr. Roosevelt, that it is not so much a question of discussing these problems theoretically as of removing in practice the barriers which exist in international trade. The worst barriers, however, lie in the individual states themselves.

Experience so far shows at any rate that greatest world economic conferences have come to nothing simply because various countries were not able to maintain order in their domestic economic systems, or else because they infected the international capital market with uncertainty by currency manipulation and above all by causing continual fluctuations in value of their currencies to one another.

It likewise is an unbearable burden for world economic relations that it should be possible in some countries for some ideological reason or other to let loose a wild boycott of agitation against other countries and their goods and so practically to eliminate them from the market.

It is my belief, Mr. Roosevelt, that it would be a great service if you with your great influence would remove these barriers genuinely to free world trade, beginning with United States. For it is my conviction that if the leaders of nations are not even capable of regulating production in their own countries or of removing boycotts pursued for ideological reasons which can damage trade relations between countries to so great an extent there is much less prospect of achieving by means of international agreements any really fruitful step toward improvement of economic relations.

An equal right for all of buying and selling in the world's market can only be guaranteed in this way. Further, the German people has made in this regard very concrete claims and I would appreciate it very much if you, Mr. Roosevelt, as one of the successors to the late President Wilson, were to devote yourself to seeing that promises be at last redeemed on the basis of which Germany once laid down her arms and gave herself up to the socalled victors.

I am thinking less of the innumerable millions extorted from Germany as socalled reparations than of territories stolen from Germany.

In and outside Europe, Germany lost approximately 3,000,000 square kilometers of territory, and that in spite of fact that whole German colonial empire in contrast to colonies of other nations was not acquired by way of war but solely through treaties or purchase.

President Wilson solemnly pledged his word that German colonial claims like all others would receive the same just examination. Instead of this, however, German possessions were given to nations who have always had largest colonial empires while our people were exposed to a great anxiety which is now—as it will continue to be in future—particularly pressing.

It would be a noble act if President Franklin Roosevelt were to redeem the promises made by President Woodrow Wilson. This would in first place be a practical contribution to the moral consolidation of the world and consequently to the improvement of its economic conditions.

XXI

Mr. Roosevelt also stated in conclusion that the heads of all the great governments are in this hour responsible for fate of humanity.

They cannot fail to hear the prayers of the peoples to be protected from the forseeable chaos of war. And I, too, would be held accountable for this.

Mr. Roosevelt! I fully understand that the vastness of your Nation and the immense wealth of your country allows you to feel responsible for history of the whole world and for the history of all nations. I, sir, am placed in a much more modest and smaller sphere. You have 130,000,000 people on 9,500,000 square kilometers.

You possess a country with enormous riches in all mineral resources, fertile enough to feed 500,000,000 people and to provide them with all necessities.

I once took over a state which was faced by complete ruin, thanks to its trust in the promises of the rest of the world and to the bad regime of democratic governments. In this state there are, roughly, 140 people to each square kilometer—not 15, as in America. The fertility of our country cannot be compared with that of yours.

We lack numerous minerals which nature has placed at your disposal in unlimited quantities.

Billions of German savings accumulated in gold and foreign exchange during many years of peace were squeezed out of us and taken from us. We lost our colonies. In 1933 I had in my country 7,000,000 unemployed workers on half-time, millions of peasants sinking into poverty, destroyed trade, ruined commerce; in short general chaos.

Since then, Mr. Roosevelt, I have only been able to fulfill one simple task. I cannot feel myself responsible for the fate of the world as this world took no interest in the pitiful state of my own people.

I have regarded myself as called upon by Providence to serve my own people alone and to deliver them from their frightful misery. Consequently during past six and one-half years, I have lived day and night for the single task of awakening the powers of my people, in view of our desertion by the whole of rest of world, of developing these powers to the utmost and of utilizing them for the salvation of our community.

I have conquered chaos in Germany, re-established order and enormously increased production in all branches of our national economy, by strenuous efforts produced substitutes for numerous materials which we lack, smoothed the way for new inventions, developed traffic, caused mighty roads to be built and canals to be dug, called into being gigantic new factories and at the same time endeavored to further the education and culture of our people.

I have succeeded in finding useful work once more for the whole of 7,000,000 unemployed who so appeal to hearts of us all, in keeping the German peasant on his soil in spite of all difficulties and in saving the land itself for him, in once more bringing German trade to a peak and in assisting traffic to the utmost.

As precaution against the threats of another world not only have I united the German people politically, but I have also rearmed them; I have also endeavored to destroy sheet by sheet that treaty which in its 448 articles contains the vilest oppression which peoples and human beings have ever been expected to put up with.

I have brought back to the Reich provinces stolen from us in 1919. I have led back to their native country millions of Germans who were torn away from us and were in misery. I have re-established the historic unity of German living space and, Mr. Roosevelt, I have endeavored to attain all this without spilling blood and without bringing to my people and consequently to others the misery of war.

I, who 21 years ago was an unknown worker and soldier of my people, have attained this, Mr. Roosevelt, by my own energy and can therefore in the face of history claim a place among those men who have done the utmost which can be fairly and justly demanded from single individual.

You, Mr. Roosevelt, have had a much easier task in comparison. You became President of United States in 1933 when I became chancellor of the Reich. In other words, from the very outset you stepped to the head of one of the largest and wealthiest states in the world.

You have the good fortune to have to feed scarcely 15 people per square kilometer in your country. You have at your disposal the most unlimited mineral resources in world. As result of the large area covered by your country and the fertility of your fields you are enabled to insure for each individual American ten times the amount of commodities possible in Germany. Nature has in any case enabled you do this.

In spite of the fact that the population of your country is scarcely one-third greater than the number of inhabitants in Greater Germany you possess more than 15 times as much living space. Conditions prevailing in your country are on such a large scale that you can find time and leisure to give your attention to universal problems. Consequently the world is undoubtedly so small for you that you perhaps believe that your intervention and action can be effective everywhere.

In this sense, therefore, your concerns and suggestions cover a much larger and wider area than mine because my world, Mr. Roosevelt, in which providence has placed me and for which I am, therefore, obliged to work, is unfortunately much smaller although for me it is more precious than anything else for it is limited to my people!

I believe, however, that this is the way in which I can be of the most service to that for which we are all concerned, namely, the justice, well-being, progress and peace of whole human community."

However, I am now compelled to state that the policy of England both unofficially and officially leaves no doubt of the fact that such a conviction is no longer shared in London.

"On the contrary, the opinion prevails there that no matter in which conflict Germany should some day become entangled, Britain will always take a stand against Germany. . . .

Offers Britain New Treaty

"I most profoundly regret such a development. For the only claim I have ever made and shall continue to make upon England is that for the return of our colonies. But I have always made it clear that this should never become the cause for military conflict. . . .

"Since England today, both in its press and officially, upholds the view that Germany should be opposed under all circumstances and confirms it by the policy of encirclement, the basis for the naval treaty has been removed.

"Should the British government, however, wish to enter once more into negotiations with Germany on this problem, nobody would be happier than myself to be able to come to a clear and straightforward understanding."

In treating with the vital subject of German-Polish relations, Hitler condemned the Versailles Peace Treaty for having carved the Polish Corridor through erstwhile German soil, declaring that the Corridor problem was the "most painful of all" for Germany. Stating his willingness to permit Poland access to the Baltic at all times, the chancellor continued:

"It is a fact that the German-Polish agreement resulted in a remarkable lessening of European tension. Nevertheless, there remained the one question open between Germany and Poland, the question of the German City of Danzig which German city wishes to belong to the Reich."

Hitler referred to his recent "concrete offer" to Poland, calling for reunion of Danzig with Germany and a German railroad across the Corridor in exchange for German guarantees of Polish economic and free harbor rights in Danzig and of Poland's present boundaries, together with a 25-year nonaggression pact. The Fuehrer said he offered moreover to renounce any German unilateral hegemony over the lower Danube and Vistula Valleys.

"The Polish government rejected my offer and declared it was prepared to negotiate only concerning the question of substituting the commissioner (withdrawing League control over Danzig) and to consider facilitating traffic through the Corridor.

"I greatly regret this incomprehensible attitude of the Polish government, the worst aspect of which is that Poland, like Czecho-Slovakia some months ago, believed under the pressure of an international lying campaign that it had to call up troops, although Germany on its part has not called up a single man nor thought of proceeding in any way against Poland."

Says Poles Infringed Pact

This, Hitler continued, led to the "so-called" British guarantee to Poland followed by the reciprocal Anglo-Polish defense agreement "which would compel Poland to take military action against Germany," in "contradiction" of the German-Polish friendship treaty. The Fuehrer announced:

"I therefore look upon the agreement as having been unilaterally infringed by Poland and thus is no longer in existence. I have communicated this view to the Polish government."

Hitler voiced an indirect bid to Warsaw to drop its military ties with Britain as the price of resuming healthy relations with Germany.

Czyeched Out

Prague, April 28 (AP).—Czech newspapers displayed prominently dispatches on Adolf Hitler's Reichstag speech today, but refrained from touching on that part in which the Fuehrer mentioned Czecho-Slovakia.

Narodni Politika headlined its editorial comment: "The speech has brought light into the international situation."

Ceske Slovo said the speech might mark the beginning of a new historical epoch.

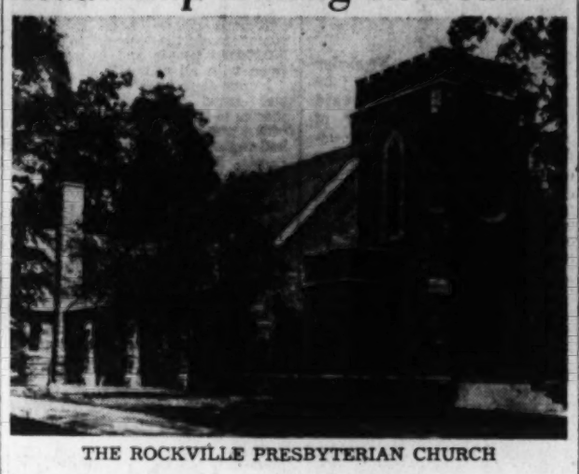
Rockville Church Stimulates Leadership Among Its Youth



THE ROCKVILLE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Ex-Sailor Pastor Cites Interest in Current Problems

Stimulating discussions in youth societies develop more intelligent leadership in the church, the Rev. Henry K. Pasma, paster of the Rockville Presbyterian Church, who is himself "very young in heart," said yesterday.

H. C. SMITH

A navigator's apprentice on "The Baltic Packet," Dutch sailing vessel, at 14, he feels today that "it is surprising how well posted young people are on present-day problems."

Describing the Christian Endeavor societies of his congregation, he said that the members are asking, among other things, how religion can be applied to marriage, war, peace, voting and law enforcement and they recently requested 15 minutes of Bible Study every Sunday. The society, of which Stewart Nicewarner is president, has as its secretary the president of the Montgomery County Endeavor Union, Ira Ward.

The Rev. Mr. Pasma gives women a very vital role in his congregation, their activities centered around the Woman's Auxiliary, of which Mrs. Pasma is president. Also very active are Mrs. Lucy M. Smith, treasurer; Mrs. Theodore Mason, past president; Mrs. Randall Talbott and Mrs. A. Speare.

Another enthusiastic unit is the Business Women's Circle, led by Mrs. Harold Smith, wife of the Police Court Judge of Rockville. Mrs. Harry Poss is past president of the group. Other leaders are Mrs. Edwin Smith, in her early eighties, member of the church since 1892, and teacher of the Adult Ladies Class; Mrs. Charles Lyddane, 84, and a resident of Arlington, who still retains her membership in Rockville. Mrs. Frank Wilson is church historian.

Elders of the church include Joseph Reading, J. G. Ward, Edward Howell, John G. McDonald and Harold C. Smith, the latter clerk of the session and Police Court Judge of Rockville. Deacons are Theodore Mason, jr., also church treasurer; William Wootton, Richard T. Schwartz and Keith Cornelius.

Rev. H. Pasma

A native of Holland, the Rev. Mr. Pasma came to America at 16 with his family, settling on the Eastern Shore in Carolin County, where they lived near the Great Choptank River in one of the four oldest houses on the Eastern Seaboard.

He was educated at Hope College, Holland, Mich., Rutgers and Western Theological Seminary, and before coming here 11 years ago, served pastorates in Wisconsin, Mississippi and Washington.

With the sea "still in his blood," the Rev. Mr. Pasma's study walls are lined with pictures of sailing vessels, among them "Old Ironsides." He also has written several books on his favorite avocation, among them "The Enchanted Sword," and "Close-Hauled."

One of the clergyman's most treasured possessions is a Dutch Bible, printed in 1663, in Amsterdam and once the property of the family of Gov. Beekman, of New York. Its inscriptions of family records are written in Dutch from 1686 to 1808.

Rockville Presbyterian Church had its origin in 1716, when members of the denomination met at Capt. John's Church (later Cabin John's Church) about 6 miles southwest of Rockville. For many years the church was served by the late Rev. Parke P. Flourney, who was pastor at the same time of Bethesda Presbyterian Church. For some time the two congregations were one, organically and historically, having one bench of elders and one communion roli.

The cornerstone of the present structure was laid on March 30, 1930.

Lutherans To Celebrate Centennial

Lutherans of Mt. Rainier will celebrate in a special service at Trinity Church tomorrow morning the centennial of the founding of the Missouri Synod of the Lutheran Church in America. The Rev. Edwin Pieplow, Trinity pastor, will preach on "What Hath God Wrought Through the Saxon Emigration?"

The Rev. William Schiebel will deliver the evening sermon, on "The Kingdom Come."

Lutheran Place Memorial. Dr. Carl C. Rasmussen, pastor, will continue his series of pre-Pentecost sermons at the 11 o'clock service, using as his subject: "What Makes the True Ministry?"

Reformation. "Another Sermon on Marriage" will be delivered by Dr. Oscar F. Blackwelder, pastor, in the evening, concluding a special series of evening sermons for April. Dr. Blackwelder will also preach at the morning service in "The Church and the World."

The Rev. Ralph W. Loew, assistant pastor, will speak at the 8:30 matin service on "Making Our Mountains a Way." The matin choir will sing at this service.

Christ. The pastor, the Rev. J. Frederic Wenchel, will speak on "Honor all Men, or the Recovery of Man." The Walther League Young Peoples' Society will meet in the evening.

Grace. At 11 a. m. the pastor, Dr. Gerhard E. Lenski, will stress in the gospel lesson for the day the transitory character of life, speaking on the words of Christ: "A Little While With You."

At this service Mr. Edwin H. Bookmyer of New York City, representing the American Bible Society, will speak on "The Book of a Thousand Tongues."

J. Fred Parsons is directing the opus, which is alleged to involve love, politics, over-modern daughters and the opinions of maiden aunts. Nuff sed.

Drama Cleanup: "Me, Him and I," another comedy involving young men trying to snare rich uncle's money by adopting a boy—or something like that—is half of the double feature billing at Attonement Lutheran Church next week. Said play, which Press Agent Doris Hinsch freely admits is "really good," goes on Friday night . . . First half of double feature, she reminds, is a superdebate tomorrow at 10 a. m. on "Resolved: That Christians Should Bear Arms" . . . The Rev. Harry Dunlap and Sam Solt are on the negative, the Rev. Harold Snyder, Helen Richter and Bill Nalley on the affirmative . . . Only they are dubious about the merits of their side of the question and are trying to hedge, says Doris, who has added to her duties that of debate chairman.

Clemons, who donated 25 Ford Theater seats, part of a Lincoln collection, to the class . . . The room will be used for religious instruction and Eric Danecke, teacher, and Howard Salzman, president of the class, will conduct the dedication.

"Co-operatives" will be discussed at the Youth Hour in Reformation Lutheran Church at 6:30 p. m. tomorrow . . . Margaret Bush will lead . . . The Young People's League will hear Jose Sanchiz and Arturo Benevente, jr., of the Maryland University Spanish Club, Nancy Fisher and Mrs. W. F. Pfeiffer speak on "South America's Contribution to the World" . . . Fred Pfeiffer is in charge of the affair.

Speaking of contributions . . . the Lookout Bible Class of Sherwood Presbyterian Church will contribute to the gayety of nations at its annual banquet, at Holbrook Farms, Monday at 7 p. m.

EXPERTS AGREE IT'S A TOSS-UP BETWEEN THE BEST U.S. BEER AND FAMOUS IMPORTED BREWS!

WHEN EXPERTS CAN'T TELL THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN U.S.A. BEERS AND COSTLY IMPORTED BEERS ... IT'S TIME TO CHEER ... WE'RE CHEERING BECAUSE ONE OF THOSE BEERS IS GUNTHER'S!

WHO ARE THE EXPERTS?

Each one of these experts is a member of the International Barmen Association with headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland. Each is a beer expert in his own right. Many have European backgrounds. All have responsible jobs here in the States. And in most every case you'll find them directing the beer and wine cellars of some of the country's finest clubs and hotels.

SO, WHICH WOULD YOU RATHER PAY...10¢ FOR GUNTHER'S OR 30¢ FOR THE IMPORTED KIND?

GUNTHER'S is "Special Dry Lager." And it's the only one of its kind sold around here. Dry and beer-y, it has just the body and flavor real beer drinkers the world over look for in a glass of real beer. No wonder it did such a grand job for the U. S. A. team of beers when experts compared U. S. beers with the finest European imported brews!

How Test Was Made!

These experts were told that there would be 3 beers from the U. S. A. and 3 famous imports from abroad. Nothing else. They were not told which was which. They were asked to use their own standard for judging quality, flavor, body, purity. And when the 37 men had made all their comparisons there was virtually no difference between U. S. beers and fine beers made abroad. In addition each man had also been asked to pick the beer he preferred to all the others!

The voting was close. They were all good beers. A European beer won. But Gunther's, the beer so well known in Baltimore and Washington came next and actually led the other two fine imported beers!

HERE'S HOW EXPERTS VOTED FOR 1st CHOICE
(The beer they liked best!)

Import A	24.3	Import B	16.2
Domestic X (Gunther's)	18.9	Domestic Z	13.5
Domestic Y	16.2	Import C	10.9

Total—100%

Put some Gunther's in the ice box today! Remember experts have chosen it right up with the world's finest beers ... yet today it costs you only a dime!

INTERNATIONAL BARMEN ASSOCIATION

Gunther Brewing Company
Baltimore, Maryland

Gentlemen:-

On last Thursday evening, at a dinner of our members, held in the Empire Room of the Hotel Lexington, a very thorough and comprehensive test was made to determine the relative merits of famous imported and domestic beers.

It was gratifying to see how the standards of brewing in this country have produced beer so excellent in taste, body, and color; that three domestic beers were virtually comparable in every way with three world-famous imported beers.

Thirty-seven experts, all master hop-men and wine stewards, engaged in this test, and none were permitted to know the names of the beers they tasted until the test was concluded.

You may also be gratified to learn that Gunthers was one of the highest ranking beers, receiving, as it did, the second highest number of votes for first choice. It was only exceeded by one world-famous imported beer in the opinion of these experts.

Yours very truly,

The Promised Land

Like nearly all other World's Fairs the one that is to open tomorrow at Flushing has an historical significance. But we must not forget that we are living in a post-Einstienian universe. Thus there should be nothing at all surprising or incongruous, that in going back a century and a half to the first inaugural of President Washington on April 30, 1789, we should find ourselves in the middle of the World of Tomorrow, with the perfect Democrarity all waiting to be hatched out of the perisphere.

Please notice that this little journey through curved and warping time has apparently enabled us to make a complete detour around the next few dozen years which seem to hold so many fearful portents for mankind. These years are, however, on the assurance of Mr. H. G. Wells—and it was he, remember, who more than 30 years ago foretold the Martian invasion of last October—merely the "darkness before the dawn" of that age when the collective intelligence shall be harnessed to the collective will.

Thus even if we were still living in the old-fashioned universe and had to drive by the clock clear through the Stygian fogs of the new Dark Ages to reach this rainbow-colored City of Tomorrow, it would still be worth the trouble. For here at last is that true comity of nations of which the philosophers have dreamed. Here we find the monster in a hundred allegorical guises eating from Frankenstein's hand. Here is everything good for everything that ails us—a vitalized education, a humanized technology, a soaring art, an equality of abundance. Here are the Four Freedoms, so placid of attitude, so untroubled of countenance, so unabashed in their nakedness, that it is plain nobody dreams of disturbing them.

And if for all its marvels it somehow resembles a magnificent projection of those cities that children build with colored blocks, why what of that? Only the brave deserve the Fair.

Unfair To Middle-Age

President Roosevelt's conclusion that men and women over 40 are not sharing as fully as other age groups in re-employment opportunities does not rest on untested theory. Findings of a committee appointed by Secretary Perkins indicate that workers losing their jobs in their early forties remain unemployed four times as long as men in their twenties. The committee found a persistent rise in the percentage of unemployed men in the age groups above 40.

It is entirely fitting that the President should use his influence to combat this tendency. As he pointed out in his proclamation calling for observance of Employment Week beginning April 30, there is no factual basis for the apparent prejudice against middle-aged workers. Of course, the average person loses some of his zest between 20 and 40. But that loss is often more than offset by the gain in judgment and stability. Indeed, 40 is an age at which men should be looking toward promotion and new responsibilities instead of being dropped from active employment.

The President has requested that employers throughout the country give special thought to the plight of middle-aged workers without jobs at a time when their family responsibilities are at a peak. His appeal is both reasonable and constructive. But employers are more likely to be influenced in matters of this sort by the practices of the Government than by words of the Chief Executive.

Fortunately, most Federal positions for which civil service examinations are conducted are open to persons between the ages of 18 and 53. This upper-age limit could not well be extended, for the retirement age is 70, and Congress requires Federal employes to serve 15 years before they become eligible for retirement. Since two years often elapse between the date of civil service examinations and the making of appointments, extension of the general eligibility age would mean that some employes would be expected to serve beyond their proverbial threescore years and ten.

In some cases, however, the upper age limit for civil service posts is much below 53. For railway postal clerks and junior professional groups the maximum age of eligibility is 35. For assistant professional groups it is 40; for associate professional groups, postal clerks and carriers, 45; for skilled and unskilled workmen, 48. Doubtless there are good reasons why these varying age limits have been fixed for different classes of work. Because of the importance of setting a good example for private industry to follow, however, these rules might well be re-examined with the object of eliminating all unnecessary restrictions based on age.

Pathological Document

It is difficult for the logical mind to grapple effectively with the long, discursive and often wholly contradictory speech which Hitler delivered to the German Reichstag yesterday. The more careful the reading of the rambling and inchoate text the more confused and muddled the impression which remains. And the reason for this, of course, is that the Fuehrer is himself confused. Because he does not know, nobody else can possibly detect from yesterday's harangue precisely what his future policy will be.

For this confusion in Hitler's mind three main factors are obviously responsible. The first is President Roosevelt's personal message of April 14. The second is the determined character which Premier Chamberlain has now given to British policy. The third is the background influence of Russia. Each of these, taken separately, would be enough to cause the German dictator concern. Taken together they amply account for the irritation and bafflement which he exhibited yesterday.

The exceptional value of Mr. Roosevelt's recent appeal is thoroughly confirmed by the character of Herr Hitler's response. Too small a man to take advantage of this constructive offer, the Fuehrer was nonetheless forced to attempt a labored justification of his repudiation. And that justification, however it may be hailed in the Nazi press, will seem to many Germans pitifully weak. When its evasions and equivocations are written off, the Fuehrer said simply that he does not propose to attempt solution of any of Germany's urgent problems by peaceful methods. To his own people this means indefinite continuation of their present debilitating wartime economy, even if war itself can be averted.

The first fact which crystallizes from this ocean of pleading, therefore, is Hitler's categorical refusal to abandon the path of aggression. In spite of much labored effort to sweeten the pill, he has told his own people, and the rest of the world, that he definitely repudiates negotiated settlements for Germany's problems. This verdict is not welcome but it is helpful. For it should finally eliminate from the discussion the still lingering assumption that the Nazis are amenable to reason, or to any argument other than force.

Publicly to admit himself an apostle of aggression was of course irritating to Hitler, whose success heretofore has centered in his ability to lull suspicion before striking. And equally irritating to the Fuehrer, as demonstrated by his reaction yesterday, is the new British policy of resisting his contemplated aggressions. It is because of pique over this opposition that he has decided to abrogate the naval limitation treaty with Great Britain and to cancel his nonaggression pact with Poland.

These steps, however, serve to bring war closer. And because he knows his people are terrified at the thought of war Hitler was forced to offset these hostile actions with a sheaf of muddy assurances of peaceful intent. He is willing to conclude new agreements, on his own terms, to replace those which he has destroyed. He admits the greatest admiration, not to say fear, of Britain's swiftly consolidating strength. He claims that he is not afraid of France but is magnanimously willing to let that country keep Alsace-Lorraine. Above all he wants the German people to be assured that if war comes they will be relatively safe—a guarantee which, as Mussolini will be quick to notice, was not extended to Italy's exposed peninsula.

Anxiety over American opinion and worry over growing British resistance were both apparent behind Hitler's bold words yesterday. And not less cogent in causing distress of mind is his developing fear of Russia. To that country as such he addressed no rebukes, though he cited the Ukraine as an unsolved issue. But in his references to the danger of a "Bolshevik destruction of European civilization" he evidently had Russia as a nation, rather than communist theory, in mind. Win, lose or draw Hitler knows that another war, involving Germany and Russia, would threaten his regime as much as that of Stalin. And his mistrust over the growing Anglo-Russian rapprochement is unmistakable.

The confusion of the Fuehrer's speech was not surprising. Heretofore his task has been easy. He has needed only to cite the wrongs of Germany, the purity of his aspirations, the justice of his claims. But now it is all different. The mask has been stripped from his ambitions of naked conquest and simultaneously he is forced to reckon with a gathering world hostility beside which even the organized and regimented might of Germany is puny. The result is the forcible-feeble, assertive yet defensive, blustering and whining confusion of his Reichstag address.

There is even an underlying note of pathos about this speech. It was noticeable in the assertion that Germany has no "feeling of inferiority" toward the British, which was of course an admission that precisely this feeling exists. Pathos was suggested in the labored effort to justify all Nazi policies, past, present and future, in terms of the injustices of Versailles. Above all it is found in the tacit admission that the evolution of German civilization under the Nazis has led only to its present status of a goose-stepping, fortified barracks.

The confidence of intelligent Germans in their leader will not be strengthened by this almost pathological diatribe. To his own people Hitler has for the first time revealed himself as futile, jittery, and in his heart afraid. To the rest of the world he has given final confirmation of the fact that force alone impresses him. Germany may yet decide to fight. But her power will be weaker, and that of her opponents will gain in strength, as a result of Hitler's self-confession of bewilderment, uncertainty and fear.

WPA Unreformed

In his relief message the President made only passing reference to his reorganization plan. He expressed a vague hope that important economies would be achieved by co-ordinating the operations of various agencies engaged on works projects. But he is evidently well satisfied with the performance of the WPA as it has operated in the past. In fact, his message embodies an ardent defense of that organization and a glowing tribute to its accomplishments, leading to a recommendation that it should be "carried on much as at present" during the coming fiscal year.

In effect this attitude is an emphatic rejection of various proposals designed to bring about savings or increase the administrative efficiency of the work-relief system. Mr. Roosevelt champions WPA white-collar projects, asserting that they are of "prime importance." He disapproves the Byrnes bill requirement that the States shall contribute a fixed percentage of the total cost of work-relief projects. He also dislikes the Byrnes formula for allocation of funds among the States, preferring that allocations be made "on the basis of jobs to be provided and not on the local basis of funds to be distributed." However, even this indorsement in principle of a legislative formula for distribution of relief funds is qualified by insistence that the formula shall be flexible and thus permit administrators to exercise discretion.

Proposals for turning back administration of relief to the State and local governments, limiting Federal participation to grants-in-aid, are likewise summarily rejected. "Under either the dole or local work programs," the President said, "the administrative cost will inevitably be much larger than under a Federally operated work program." This categorical assertion is unsupported by evidence. Moreover, it ignores the fact that when local taxpayers are compelled to help finance relief projects the authorities are under great pressure to economize.

After reading the relief message, one naturally wonders why the President was in such haste to bring the WPA, the PWA and other works agencies under a single administrator. If the WPA is to remain intact and unreformed for an indefinite period, the President might as well have stayed his hand. In the absence of any genuine reform of the relief system, the only hope for reducing WPA expenditures lies in a pronounced improvement in business and a rise in employment. It is frankly upon that expectation that the President has based his request for a greatly reduced appropriation.

Present indications, however, strongly forecast a repetition of the procedure of the current year—that is, exhaustion of original relief grants, followed by requests for additional funds. The only sure way of putting an effective curb upon WPA spending is to insist upon reforms in the relief system. Congress now has under consideration various constructive proposals. They should not be put aside in the mistaken belief that the President's re-organization plan is an adequate reform measure.

Mind Over Matter

In the closing lecture before this week's assembly of the District Medical Society, the effect of the mind on the stomach was discussed. And it seems to have been concluded that a stomach ache may sometimes be cured by a psychologist, providing, of course, that the cause of the disturbance, when found, can be removed.

One of the examples offered was that of a delegate to the League of Nations, "who invariably got sick at banquets and had to leave." For Washington, in particular, this is an alarming disclosure, with unpleasant powers of suggestion. Fortunately, however, it comes as the social season draws to a close.

An even more poignant case, is the one of the lady who had repeated operations for stomach trouble, to no avail. It later appeared there was nothing organically wrong. She was merely allergic to her husband and was perfectly well whenever he was absent.

This does not confute the assumption that the way to a man's heart is through his stomach. It merely indicates that the way to a woman's stomach is through her heart.

Life is just an accumulation of habits, mostly bad.

District Reorganization

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

To avoid the unpleasant consequences of name-calling and impugned motives in considering the proposed change in the organization of the government of the District, largely through anticipation or anxiety of probable shifts in habitual relations over two generations, an examination by measurement of the status of some 300 cities by E. L. Thorndike, presented in a recent publication, "Your City," may be suggested.

The late Mr. Justice Cardozo, quoting Brutt, said, "The interpreter must above all things put aside his estimate of political and legislative values, and must endeavor to ascertain in a purely objective spirit what ordering of the social life of the community best comports with the aim of the law in question in the circumstances before him."

Good cities, says Thorndike, give a high correlation in taxable wealth, private income and the personal life of the people as shown in life for babies, health and education for children, parks and playgrounds, safety for life and limb, absence of slums, and child labor, wide provisions for gas, electricity, phones and radios, high wage scales, honesty and wisdom in municipal government, past or present, or both, and the other aids of a good life. Facing the facts when gathered, we now have an objective to be sought and a yardstick by which to measure the intent of the reorganization and its costs.

Mr. Cardozo said further, "Considerable latitude must be allowed for differences of view as well as possible peculiar conditions—otherwise a constitution, instead of embodying only relatively fundamental rights as generally understood by all English-speaking people and communities, would become the partisan of a particular ethical or set of economical opinions." Here we had a criterion for the criticism by minority groups in general.

The manner in which the proposed plan of reorganization has been modified from its original form, by the expression of the wishes of the local citizens concentrating upon special phases, bespeaks for it, now, upon detailed examination a more favorable reception, when an overview in social changes in the Nation is taken.

Not always recognized but acted upon and fundamentally believed by those who bore the brunt of progress in America, certain philosophies indicate national trends. First the passion for liberty dominated, then State's rights held sway to be undermined by Sir Henry Maine's Ancient Laws in 1861, showing how the family must give way to contract and individualism. This collapsed with the World War and ushered us into communal or social living, which has raised the administrative process into a fourth branch of government.

Earlier stages had and have their bitter-enders and vestiges, but it appears that the coincidence of the Griffenhagen plan and the Thorndike measurement represent a definite step in a new direction.

The Neutrality Issue

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

It would seem that all persons who favor the humanities and decencies of civilization should ask their Congressmen and Senators to correct immediately the abominable injustices in the present neutrality act so that sale of all war material would be forbidden to aggressor nations, but be permitted to nations fighting for their independence and the lives, liberties and livelihood of their people.

When bandits, kidnapers and other criminal pests of society are at large in our communities, what would we think of those who knowingly sell any means of murder to such public enemies? Would we not consider them accomplices and deserving of very severe punishment? Yet our present neutrality law encourages international bandits. In so far as they get our assistance it would seem as if we were really their accomplices in outraging the God of justice, and the Christ of love and peace.

Explosive shells such as could and did blow up crowded blocks in Shanghai, were made of American scrapiron. American women buying stockings and other apparel made of Japanese silk, instead of from the rayon and cotton of their own country, were helping to finance the rape of China. Our practical aid to Japan not only is unhumanitarian, but also by ruining and destroying the Chinese market for cotton and other products of our farms and factories, tends to deepen the recession in our own country.

If Hitler and Mussolini, with their anti-Christian philosophy and insane lust for power, bring on world war, are we going to give them help as we have done Japan against China? If so, we would be accomplices in crime. Because of a foolish and really wicked neutrality law, we may be unable to discriminate between fiends and friends. There is no good reason why we should not have trade with our friends as hitherto, and sell them whatever they want for self-defense. But there is every reason why the bandit fiends should be denied anything from this country that can make them more dangerous for civilization. HENRY D. BAKER.
Durham, N. C., April 26.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Deeper than the day can tell is the measure of destiny residing in what this Congress is going to do about neutrality.

If, when the world's dread zero hour comes, we shall find ourselves, not free for action, but instead shackled by legislation of this day in which we see but darkly, then our self-shackling may (and, I think, will) cause the downfall of all the world but us. Thus our own downfall will likewise be a sure and certain thing.

If, today, we shackle ourselves against greatest possible freedom of action, then, tomorrow, other world powers, which hate all human freedom, will bind shackles fast upon us.

In as much as we realize there is no possible neutrality legislation which does not to greater or less degree tie our hands in advance of our Nation's uncertain future, we are confronted with the fact that what we really need is freedom from all neutrality legislation. Already, it has been tried, and found wanting. It brings, not fear, but hope, into the hearts of all aggressor nations. CLANCY L. WILLIAMS.
Shipman, Va., April 26.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Not to be free during critical times—moments of destiny—is not to be really free at all. For freedom has to do, first and foremost, with decisions. In decisions—in the moments that decide things—does freedom move and have its being.

If, then, our future great moments shall find us already tied by neutrality legislation which gives aid and comfort to aggressors; if, after our thorough experience with the actual working of such legislation during the recent war in Spain, in which one decisive factor in fascism's triumph was our refusal to sell war supplies to the republican forces, we fail to repeal all neutrality legislation then we have sinned against the very soul of freedom.

Neutrality legislation can help us today only by disappearing from our books entirely. Then, and only then, can we, even though technically neutral, be free to throw real, decisive help to those to whom our hearts go out. Then, and only then, can we strengthen the real security of society, which, again, is freedom. BOLLING SOMERVILLE.
Norwood, Va., April 27.

"Absurd"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Dictator Benito Mussolini is still at his best when functioning in the roll of his earlier occupation of editor. Taking in hand President Roosevelt's appeal for a spell of peace he blue pencils it all. Writing over it the one word "absurd," he effectively epitomizes the present world situation.

For what is more absurd than the position of England and France, the "haves," trying with might and main to hold on to possessions which are a source of perennial incitement to devastating wars, expect the absurd position of Italy and Germany, the "have nots," who are striving desperately to acquire the selfsame war-provoking possessions?

What can be more absurd than the position of the United States, unable, try as it may, first with one form of neutrality then with another, to keep out of the bickerings and wars of Europe?

Who can measure the absurdity of Adolf Hitler's dream, that by keeping a nucleus of race-conscious Germans in every country he can exercise his totalitarian rule over the whole world? But absurdity is crowned when we contemplate the present relationship of Germany and Italy to each other.

In 1915, Italy was the sworn ally of Germany and Austria. In that year England and France offered her a secret "inducement" of some colonial territory if she would desert her allies and join in the war against them.

Editor Mussolini counseled and approved of the switch and it was made. That Italy's assistance proved to be a liability to her new friends is only an incidental absurdity. It is the present attitude of Hitler and Mussolini to the betrayal which makes a mockery of reason.

For, to collect the unpaid "inducement" from dilatory France, Mussolini has acquired the assistance of the armed power of Germany, her former victim. Hitler, on his part, ostentatiously throws his arm about the shoulders of Mussolini on every public occasion and proclaims in every speech, "the only true friend we have in Europe is Fascist Italy.

Faced with such a preposterous situation, ordinary reason cannot find a remedy for the absurdities which confront the world. Perhaps we will have to accept the suggestion of Editor Mussolini and fight another absurd war, follow it with another absurd peace and settle down for an absurdly short spell to prepare for the next war.

The D. A. R. Position

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

At the recent Continental Congress of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, the following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas, despite the fact that momentous history-making news crowds the front pages of all newspapers today, the press has generously given much valuable space to the proceedings of this Congress.

"Resolved, That the Forty-eighth Continental Congress express its appreciation to the managers of newspapers and news services who have reported all proceedings with understanding and fairness, to the special representatives of newspapers who have covered this Congress."

May I add my personal appreciation to you for the splendid service your representative, Miss Jessie Ash Arndt, rendered us.

I would also like to tell you how much we appreciated the splendid article which appeared in the Sunday issue. We feel that this is evidence of your good faith in our organization.

The Post Impressionist

The Poet

I REMEMBER him as a very old man with a spreading white beard and sparkling blue eyes and a low and gentle voice. But what impressed me most was the all-fatherly manner. A great man with time to pause and give a 13-year-old girl a few words of wisdom, sympathy and encouragement. And, most of all, his words meant courage for me.

Edwin Markham, one of the greatest of men talented with the clear expression of man's high aspirations, is just turned 87 years. He was born at Oregon City April 23, 1852, and the anniversary is also that of William Shakespeare. And like Shakespeare's, the birthday of Edwin Markham is now observed almost everywhere the language is spoken.

For Edwin Markham's poem about the poor old French peasant leaning on his rude and heavy hoe has become part of the heritage of our race—a race that has never lived by bread alone.

When the poem was printed in the San Francisco Examiner in 1899, after several weeks of editorial trumpeting, the reaction was immediate and amazing. The effect was instant and profound. So astonishing was the poem's reception in those days when Socialism was having dim beginnings in America and everyone wondered what was coming next, Collis P. Huntington, one of the most machiavellian and phegmatic of the West's great financiers, was disturbed.

"My God!" said Huntington. "Will a poem turn the United States to Socialism?" And he said, "That man had nothing to kick about—he had a hoe, didn't he?"

It was even rumored that Huntington was the inspiration of the answer to Markham's poem by John Vance Cheney, itself so powerful that it now appears beside the Markham poem in the anthologies.

I met Edwin Markham when he came to lecture at my boarding school in the blue grass of Kentucky. I was very young, and because I was young I wanted to see my flag on the admiral's staff of letters. I wanted to be a poet. Hearing this—one of my teachers told him—Mr. Markham called me to him and put his arm about my shoulders:

"Don't forget to send me some of your poetry some time," he said.

Then, pulling a pad from his coat pocket, he wrote this always to be remembered line and gave it to me. "Defeat may serve as well as victory to open the soul and let the glory out."

He must have known how often I would have need of that thought!

Not all great men live to hear their fame on the lips of the multitude, but Edwin Markham received world plaudits and floods of praise 40 years ago, and his fame has grown with the years. It is quite possible that thousands know his poem who do not know that it was inspired by Millet's painting, just as Marc Connolly with his derivative play gets the credit rather than Roark Bradford, who wrote the original story of "Green Pastures."

Edwin Markham himself, for all his learning and literary facility, knows what it is to toil. He was born at a time when Oregon City was slashing in the giant sugar pine that marched from the Cascades down to the Williamette River, and he farmed and herded sheep as a young man in Oregon and California. Someone calls "The Man With the Hoe" the battlecry of the next thousand years. That is too far a look for me. I know for sure that the poem was written by a man who knew the tragedy of wringing an existence from the soil.

This verse, written in a crisis of his own life, is lesson enough for us all; if we seek a lesson from Edward Markham:

He drew a circle that shut me out,
Heretic, rebel, a thing to flout;
But Love and I had the wit to win—
We drew a cricle that took him in!

Delay Experienced

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

In addition to the danger to which pedestrians are exposed because of the inconsistency of the traffic lights, as Columbia road and Eighteenth street, pointed out in "Suicide Corner No. 7" article which appeared in your paper of the 26th, streetcar riders experienced delay and inconvenience at this busy transfer point because an alternating red light holds up Mount Pleasant cars bound downtown just before reaching the loading platform.

The red light is performing the paradoxical duty of giving pedestrians a break in crossing between the bank corner and the "island" between Eighteenth or Calvert street and Adams Mill road, while it stops vehicles turning from Columbia road into Adams Mill road. There are no car tracks upon which streetcars could be switched from Columbia road into Adams Mill road. The reason a red light is provided to stop the streetcars just before reaching the loading platform, therefore, is not apparent.

Because passengers are not permitted to alight from streetcars stalled just a few paces before reaching the loading platform, they frequently miss a connecting Navy Yard or other car crossing Columbia road at Eighteenth street, or the Calvert Bridge car or Chevy Chase bus bound in the opposite direction.

Evidently there are enough necessary lights along the street railway rights of way and lights which unnecessarily retard this means of transportation obviously should be removed. LEWIS L. YOUNG.
Washington, April 27.

Books And Things

The Jalopy Age

YOU REMEMBER the story of the used-car lot in John Steinbeck's "The Grapes of Wrath." Or the tragedy of the burned-out bearing on the hill beyond Santa Rosa (Malcolm Cowley says that Steinbeck describes that repair job "as if he were singing the exploits of heroes at the siege of Troy")? Well, there's something that William Saroyan calls a "story" in his latest book, "Peace, It's Wonderful" (Modern Age, 50 cents), worthy to set beside those stories in John Steinbeck's epic.

"1924 Cadillac for Sale," Saroyan calls it. It's typical Saroyanesque monologue by a used-car salesman. This salesman just stands around and waits for people to ask questions about the antique jalopies he displays. He tells them the truth. And they buy. They want the rattletrap patchwork tin cans. "Either the people of this country are natural-born heroes," the salesman meditates, "or the average used car is part human and will respond to loving care." These people come in with their tools and take the creaking piles of junk apart and put them together again. Some of them are Filipinos who have picked up the American worship of the machine and some are women. They all love cars. And Saroyan's salesman wanders off into a rhapsodic prose poem about the people who tinker with used cars:

"Don't ever think it's machinery," he says. "It's people. It's America, the awful energy of the people. . . . People with no money having the polite impudence to want class and get it at no expense and to insist on getting it no matter how run-down and useless it might seem at first glance. I don't sell used cars any more. I just stand around in this lot and admire the will of the people, men, women and children, as they take over a bankrupt and exhausted piece of machinery and breathe new and joyous life into it. I just stay here and admire this great and crazy race of adventure-loving people who can't be stopped by truth or expense. I just watch them throw themselves into a cause and come out with a roaring motor that five minutes ago was a piece of dead and rusted junk." . . . All this the salesman says to the new customer, morosely adding that the 1924 Cadillac the customer insists on buying isn't really worth five cents.

THAT STORY, with its overtones of comment on the whole of American civilization, is one of Saroyan's successes, as good in its way as any story in "The Daring Young Man on the Flying Trapeze," Mr. Saroyan's first and most exciting book. Some of the other stories are good; some are mere rough drafts, like a man with a horn swinging improvisations with his friends after hours. The man with a horn, if he's good, wouldn't want all of his experiments to be recorded in wax and published for the phonographs; but Mr. Saroyan, though he is good, seems to have no sense of selectivity. He loves all his stories with the same rhapsodic, uncritical Tom-Wolfeish glow with which he loves all the world, and so sometimes his rhapsodies lose meaning.

"When I walked out into the street," he says, "I was laughing because it was so good to be in the world, so excellent to be a part of the chaos and unrest and agony and magnificence of this place of man, so comic and tragic to be alive during a moment of its change . . . the trains, and the faces, and the eyes, and the grief, and Austria, and Poland, and Russia. . . . man stumbling mourfully after God in the wilderness, the street musicians of Edinburgh crying out for God in the songs of America, dancing after Him down steep street, the tragic dream stalking everywhere through day and night, so that when I walked into the street I was laughing and begging God to pity them, love them, protect them, the king and beggar alike."

Such laughter and such a love, Mr. Saroyan, become almost as meaninglessly all-inclusive as a world's fair.

You hear people say that Saroyan is not as good as he used to be, I think it is a mistaken criticism. He is just as good as he ever was. He is just the same, which may be an even more serious criticism. It remains true that Mr. Saroyan's is one of the half dozen authentic new voices which have come into American writing in the last decade; one had a right to hope for development, for a growing range and maturity.

Hitler's Speech

THE LAST HALF of Chancellor Hitler's speech, in which he replied to the President was of much less importance than the middle portion in which he indicated his response to the new policy of Mr. Chamberlain. The response is contained in the passages where the chancellor explained the destruction of Czecho-Slovakia, revealed his recent demands on Poland, and declared that the German-Polish treaty of nonaggression is no longer in effect.

The questions raised by the President belong to the realm of debate and were answered by words. But the situation created by the British organization of a European coalition belongs to the realm of action, and Hitler made it as clear as he ever does, in addresses of this sort, that he is preparing to act.

He explains that the first stage of his action against Czecho-Slovakia was based on the right of the Sudeten Germans to union with the Germans of the Reich. This was his justification of the dismemberment agreed to at Munich in September. The second stage of his action was based, he then explained, on the fact that Czecho-Slovakia was an armed ally of Germany's potential enemies. This was his justification for the destruction of the Czech state. He then went on to say that he had recently made demands on Poland for the return of the German city of Danzig and for a corridor across the Polish Corridor to connect East Prussia with the rest of Germany.

Danzig Recognized As German City

THESE demands are intrinsically more just than the demand of last year for the annexation of the Sudeten areas of Bohemia and Moravia. Danzig is and always has been a German city; the taking of Danzig has generally been recognized by impartial students as one of the clear injustices of the Treaty of Versailles. Moreover, the Polish Corridor, though desirable in order to facilitate Poland's access to salt water, cuts off one part of Germany from the rest. Hitler's demand for a road across the corridor from Germany into East Prussia has, therefore, a strong moral foundation. As a matter of fact, all this was recognized in the President's message, where Danzig, which is a free city under the League of Nations, was conspicuously omitted from the list of 31 states for which Mr. Roosevelt asked pledges.

Thus, as respects Poland the chancellor has now placed himself in an even stronger position than that which he took last year toward the Czechs. He has made demands which are intrinsically more just and more negotiable than his demands on the Czechs. But he has made his reasonable demands on the Poles immediately following his destruction of the Czech national state, and the Poles, fearing that if they yield anything as did the Czechs when they accepted the Runciman mission, they will be totally destroyed as were the Czechs, have mobilized and have made a military alliance with Great Britain and France. Thus they have given to Hitler the same reason for their own annihilation as a national state which he invoked for the annihilation of the Czech national state. That is to say, they have joined a military alliance.

Polish Alliance With Nazis Wanted

THE MOST significant passage in Hitler's address came when, after depicting what had happened to the Czechs because they had mobilized and had made a military alliance, he offered to negotiate a new treaty of guaranties with Poland. That offer was in substance a demand, not only for Danzig and the highway across the Corridor, but for an abandonment of the Franco-British alliance and its replacement by a kind of German alliance.

This, then, would seem to forecast the next act in the European crisis. It is to consist, we may surmise, of a campaign to break up Mr. Chamberlain's alliances by pushing Poland into the system of the axis. Whether this means war or no war, it is impossible to say. The answer would seem to depend on whether the Poles can find a basis for negotiating about Danzig and the Corridor without rendering themselves defenseless by abandoning their alliances, and, as a corollary, on whether Hitler's demands are only for Danzig and the Corridor, or whether they now include the dissolution of the Anglo-Polish alliance.

It is obvious that Hitler is not interested in a general world settlement, such as the President has had in mind, and that he is preoccupied with the immediate problem of breaking up the coalition which Great Britain has organized. The vital point of that coalition in its present form is Poland, and the Polish question is, therefore, the central issue in Europe at this moment.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Henry Gregor gives his second lecture-recital on Bach, Beethoven and Brahms in Phillips Memorial Gallery Thursday night. Program: Bach's Prelude and Fugue in B flat minor from "Das Wohltemperirte Clavier" and Brahms' "Fantasien," Op. 116.

Continuing the series of lecture-recitals which he began last week on the practically inexhaustible topic of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms, Henry Gregor devoted most of his speaking time last evening to amplification of the statement that the three composers are linked not only in the order of artistic succession but also in their habit of developing themes through a process of logic analogous to the growth of an organism. His emphasis on this point was not misplaced in this period of experiment when many radical composers discard thematic development as an old-fashioned bit of pedantry.

While agreeing with him on this significant characteristic of the three B's, one can take exception to his dictum that no one of them was in the slightest degree romantic. Logical development is not inconsistent with romantic feeling, for romanticism is not a particular style of writing, but a state of mind. It is only when romanticism is unchecked by reason that it becomes flamboyant and rhetorical. Still Mr. Gregor made an important distinction between the fruitful process of development and the purely romantic "endless melody" of Liszt and Wagner, and illustrated the difference by playing passages from Beethoven's "Hammerclavier" sonata, Liszt's A flat major "Liebestraum" and Wagner's "Liebestod."

Bach was represented on the program by the B flat minor prelude and fugue from "The Well-Tempered Clavichord," and Brahms by the "Fantasien," Op. 116. These seven pieces, three capriccios and four intermezzi, are seldom heard either in succession or in solitary state, and only one of them, the seventh, can be found on a gramophone record. The opportunity of listening to them all in one evening, with Mr. Gregor's apt comments, provided a satisfying experience.

A large and attentive audience must have gained among other rewards a perception of what music means to a musician. Mr. Gregor does not strive either for eloquence in his spoken words or for virtuosity in his playing. His informal remarks, however, revealed an intuitive knowledge of musical thought, as his playing disclosed sensitive qualities of interpretation.

Firemen Battle Blaze in 155-ft. Church Steeple

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., April 28.—Firemen fought three hours yesterday to extinguish a blaze in the steeple of St. John's Catholic Church here after the 155-foot spire had been struck 12 hours before by lightning and smouldered unnoticed.

The 14-foot cross atop the copper dome of the steeple toppled to the ground and burning embers injured Ray Steele, one of the firemen. Harry Curry, sexton of the church, discovered the fire yesterday morning. Because of the location of the blaze, firemen were handicapped in extinguishing it. The fire occupied on the 102d anniversary of the church's consecration.

Worthwhile Gamble

By Mark Sullivan

What Next, Now?

HITLER has spoken; what next? That is, what next for America?

Up to now, President Roosevelt's message to the dictators, asking for ten years of non-aggression, could be considered as an act standing alone. But that act was bound to have a chain of consequences. One possible consequence would have been supremely fortunate. Had Hitler accepted the suggestion, Mr. Roosevelt would have been one of history's great war-preventers, and the world would have been supremely grateful.

The gamble was worth taking. It was unthinkable that the European situation should be permitted to move on toward war without every possible effort to avert that outcome. The obligation to try to avert it was on everybody in any position of responsibility. It was on the head of our own Nation in proportion to our position and the stake we have in the world.

America Committed To Course Of Policy

THE CHANCE was worth taking, and Mr. Roosevelt's action was justified. A man of different temperament might have done it differently; but some such action was justified from the point of view that practically all America holds. It was justified from the standpoint of keeping America out of war. For avoiding involvement in European war, there are several possible paths. The surest of all would be to prevent the war from happening. That was the purpose of what Mr. Roosevelt did.

The fact that the chance has gone the other way does not lessen the justification for Mr. Roosevelt's attempt. But it does give rise to a very different chain of consequences. America is now, to a degree, committed to a course of policy. For Mr. Roosevelt, by the very act of addressing Hitler as he did, made a kind of contingent commitment.

It was not merely as a disinterested neutral that Mr. Roosevelt addressed Hitler. True, Mr. Roosevelt was careful to say that he was "acting only with the obligation and responsibility of a friendly intermediary." But actually Mr. Roosevelt was not a neutral holding the balance even between two contending sides. Mr. Roosevelt made himself a kind of spokesman for the 31 nations he named. He spoke for practically the whole of the world outside Germany and Italy, for that part of the world which feels threatened by Germany and Italy.

Hitler Now Has Formal Warning

SPEAKING for that part of the world, and especially of course for the United States, Mr. Roosevelt told Hitler, in effect, that if Hitler continued his course, the United States would look upon it as something of which we must take account. What Mr. Roosevelt said to Hitler was not, "Please, Mr. Hitler, stop!" Had Mr. Roosevelt's message been that, it would not have been worth sending, for it would have put no pressure on Hitler. What Mr. Roosevelt really said to Hitler was, in effect, "Unless you stop, the United States will take account of what you are doing."

In a sense, Mr. Roosevelt did the thing which Prime Minister Asquith of Great Britain failed to do preceding the Great War. It is generally considered that if, preceding the Great War, Asquith had made it clear to Germany that any attack by Germany upon France would not be regarded with disinterest by Britain—in that event, many believe, the Great War would not have taken place.

Some such result may still happen in the present case. Hitler has been told, in effect, that if he makes war upon France and Great Britain; or, if he continues to pursue his policy of aggression generally, the United States will not remain disinterested. This warning Hitler now has. He may yet be guided by it. His speech to the Reichstag is not necessarily a declaration of permanent refusal to cease aggression. If in this way Mr. Roosevelt's action prevents war, the actions is justified. To prevent war in Europe is a better path toward our remaining at peace than any possible neutrality law we can devise for remaining at peace while war rages.

U. S. Now Must Back President's Position

BUT THE responsibility Mr. Roosevelt has taken puts upon him, and upon America, a future and continuing obligation. Mr. Roosevelt cannot be in the position of merely having made a bluff. And the Congress and people of the United States must not put their President in the position of having made a bluff. Yet our present status with respect to our neutrality laws threatens to have just that effect.

The steps we can take, if we are called upon to do so, in backing up our President, have been described by Mr. Roosevelt himself. They do not include, necessarily, going to war. Mr. Roosevelt has described them as "steps short of war." Such steps are of various kinds. The principal one would be to stand ready, in case of war, to supply munitions to the nations upon whom Hitler has made war.

Yet the supplying of munitions, during a war, to the nations Hitler may have attacked is made impossible by our neutrality law as it now stands. That law forbids absolutely the sale of munitions under any circumstances by American manufacturers to any nation engaged in war. To change this neutrality law, to make us flexible so that we can take "steps short of war" in aid of any nation attacked by Hitler, is the first obligation put upon us by the situation in which we now find ourselves.

The Answer

By Barnet Nover

Hitler Shows His Hand

WE PAY too much attention to the "dictators' speeches," said Winston Churchill on the eve of Hitler's Reichstag address, "and give too little study to the marshaling of their forces and the spread of their authority."

To a very considerable degree, Churchill is right. Words can be used to conceal thought and disguise action and there are no more effective practitioners of the art than our twentieth century Caesars. But this time Hitler unconsciously made one of his most revealing speeches. In it he outlined for all who care to read between the lines just how he plans to marshal his forces and spread his authority.

THERE IS in this as in so many others of Hitler's speeches a good deal of what can be regarded as so much window-drssing, obviously designed for domestic and international effect. There is, for instance, his solemn protestations of injured innocence against charges that he has been guilty of repeated aggressions.

There are the now threadbare pledges of continued peace. There is the reboiling of the bones of the Versailles Treaty which has provided the Fuehrer with so much oratorical sustenance. There is the catalogue of grievances and the catalogue of achievements. There is the same twisted logic, the same distorted history, the same staggering lies.

Asked by President Roosevelt to give a plain answer to a plain question, Hitler denounced the question as tactless and in a spate of words declared an answer unnecessary.

BUT THERE WAS a good deal more to the speech than that. It also disclosed a program of action and took the first step in the direction of the fulfillment of that program. In a very real sense the Reichstag speech of April 28 can be called the Mein Kampf of 1939.

Hitler is faced by a situation far different from that which destroyed the independence of Austria or when he dismembered Czecho-Slovakia or when he annexed Bohemia and Moravia. For the first time since his spectacular rise to power he faces a possible combination of forces too great to be intimidated and too dangerous to be ignored. And for the first time, too, he has to take into account the possibility of an unfavorable public opinion at home.

SINCE THE MUNICH crisis two developments occurred in Germany whose importance the world has generally underestimated. The first is the unpleasant realization by Germans last fall that the policy of the fuehrer might lead to war. This feeling the Nazi regime has sought to counter with all the instruments at the command of the propaganda machine. But the feeling has not died. And it has not died because through the radio the people of the Third Reich, or at least an important section of them, have been kept informed regarding the general trend of events in the world outside.

They know that after March 15 Great Britain began to stir out of her lethargy, that in combination with France, the British government has sought to build an anti-aggression combination particularly directed against Germany. And if they didn't know of this through foreign sources they were aware of it through the clamor of the Nazi press on the subject of "encirclement." They also are aware that a change has come over American policy which bodes no good for Hitler. From all accounts the President's message left a deep impression on Germans which the fuehrer could not safely leave out of account. The fact that he took almost two weeks to reply to Mr. Roosevelt shows how important he deemed it to be. And it was important because America is important.

HITLER MUST go on. His past conquests have considerable strategic value, but thus far they have solved no economic problems. On the contrary they have only multiplied them. But Hitler cannot yet risk a head-on collision with an important combination of powers. Above all it is necessary for him to avoid having to wage a war on two fronts.

Friday's speech shows that he has a plan for avoiding such a war. And that plan is simply the continuation of the strategy he has hitherto pursued with such unexampled success. In other words he has no intention of taking on a host of enemies at once, but instead will maneuver to take them on one at a time.

OBVIOUSLY, a great international conference is out, so far as he is concerned. In the first place, he cannot afford to stand still during the time it would take to prepare such a conference, nor is he at all in favor of going into a meeting where the odds would be at all equal. When it comes to conferences, he wants the odds overwhelmingly on his side, as when he conferred with Schuschnigg or with Hacha, or when his fellow conferees were men, such as Chamberlain and Daladier at Munich, who were prepared to give him everything he wanted.

He means it, therefore, when he says he is willing to give a promise of nonaggression to any individual nation that asks for it. But that does not mean he will give it, without exacting a price, or to all nations, or that, if it suits his needs, he will not treat such a promise as he has others that have proved inconvenient. Precisely such a pledge was given to Poland in 1934. Look at what is happening to this pledge now and to the 1935 Naval Treaty with Great Britain.

IT IS POSSIBLE that to secure even a temporary breathing spell, some of the smaller nations will walk into the parlor, the door to which Hitler has opened, rather than risk his disfavor by joining the British camp. And, having freed his hands in one direction, the fuehrer will then be free to move in another.

The speech indicates in what direction he may next move. Early last year Hitler spoke of the 10,000,000 Germans living adjacent to Germany's borders over whom the Third Reich had thrown the mantle of his protection. The world knows what happened. Now Hitler insists on Danzig and a road across the Corridor.

They are not, in themselves important demands. Under other circumstances a good case might be made out for them. But the satisfaction of those seemingly minor demands would mean, in the long run, the neutralization of Poland. Should Rumania, at the same time, be lured into accepting a promise of nonaggression, the possible eastern front, without which Great Britain and France would face a desperate situation if attacked by the Third Reich, might disappear. And it is much too early to suggest that in this particular Hitler will not have his way. For if he has increasing enemies who may yet bar his way to further aggressions he also has powerful allies in every country and their names are Guillibility and Weakness.

Tax

think their taxes are too heavy. We felt that we should make that concession to business."

The committee vote came on a motion by Representative McCormack (Democrat), of Massachusetts, who is one of the strongest House advocates of corporate tax revision as well. McCormack favors repeal of the capital stock tax, the excess profits tax and the undivided profits tax, substituting a single corporate income tax high enough to maintain the revenue.

House Must Act First

Corporate tax revision along this line was the basis of extendeed White House conferences attended by Chairman Harrison, of the Senate Finance committee, Chairman Cooper, of the House Ways and Means tax subcommittee, and Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau. No agreement was reached between the conferees. Responsibility for the move was passed back and forth between Treasury and Capitol.

Ultimately, Harrison pointed out that no Senate action was possible until the House, with power to originate revenue legislation, first acted on continuance of the present corporate tax structure.

Doughton said yesterday that the reason for delay has been apparent, and said the Treasury understands that it is the desire of the House committee to conclude its consideration of the social security act amendments before passing on to the general business tax question.

Levies Expire June 30

But that's something we are going to take up just as soon as we finish these amendments," he reiterated to reporters.

The chairman was unable to say whether proposed corporate tax changes, taxation of income from tax-exempt securities and continuance of expiring nuisance taxes will be considered by the committee at one time or separately. He pointed out that the time element is important, as the nuisance levies expire June 30.

Another matter requiring early committee consideration is the Treasury request for legislation eliminating the present limit of $30,000,000,000 on the total amount of Federal bonds that may be outstanding at any time. This may be taken up in advance of the corporate tax question, as the Treasury will engage in large refinancing operations in June.

Doughton throught there would be ample time to deal with all of these matters.

"If Congress adjourns before August 1, I will be surprised," he said.

Yielded $391,021,000

The committee chairman said his group may be ready to introduce a bill embodying the social security act amendments late next week. Yesterday's pay roll tax action was tentative, as no bill is formally before the committee, but Doughton pointed to the unanimity of the action and predicted it would not be reversed.

The old age insurance pay roll levy, which will be frozen at present rates by yesterday's committee action, yielded the Treasury $391,021,000 for the first nine months of this fiscal year, which was $19,479,000 more than for the same period last year.

In submitting the frozen rate proposal to Congress in March, Morgenthau, without recommending it, raised the question of "whether a substantial increase in the tax rate should be allowed to occur at the present stage of business recovery."

Dragonette Is Hit; 'Ladies From Kentucky' Is Screen Feature

"THE LADY'S FROM KENTUCKY," Paramount picturization of a story by Rowland Brown, adapted to the screen by Malcolm Stuart Boylan, with George Raft, Ellen Drew, Hugh Herbert, ZaSu Pitts, Louise Beavers, Lew Payton Forrester Harvey, Harry Tyler, Edward J. Pawley, Gilbert Emery, Eugene Jackson and Jimmy Bristow. Directed by Alexander Hall. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Capitol Theater.

Jessica Dragonette and the Houyhnhnms are the most attractive offerings of the Capitol Theater's new bill. The winsome singer of the airlanes headlines the stage show and the Houhynhnms are the redeeming feature of a deadly film, "The Lady's From Kentucky."

In her vaudeville debut Miss Dragonette makes a pleasing impression. To those to whom she has been singing over the radio for the last dozen years, she is revealed as a tiny, blonde figure, with a quiet dignity and simple charm that is refreshing to find on the Capitol's large stage. She introduces her too-brief recital with "Kiss Me Again" and then, with the orchestra, sings Delibes' florid air, "The Daughters of Cadiz." Arpad Sandor is her piano accompanist and played for her in the Liszt "Love Dream," an evident favorite with yesterday afternoon's audience. Mr. Sandor is so fine and noted a musician that one would welcome more of him in Miss Dragonette's act. "Siboney" brings back Phil Lampkin's orchestra with the swirling Spanish rhythm and, for an encore, Miss Dragonette yesterday sang a subdued "Swanee River." When the audience indicated a desire for more, the debutante graciously explained that the show must continue and that we would enjoy the following act. While all this may not be exactly fresh procedure from a vaudeville artist, Miss Dragonette achieved it so coolly and modestly that we found her a vastly pleasant entertainer.

Swift Was Right

As we have said, the Houyhnhnms are the best thing about "The Lady's From Kentucky." They are, you remember, Dean Swift's favorite people in "Gulliver's Travels," the horses who think humans are a thoroughly degenerate race and "The Lady's From Kentucky" pretty much convinces that, if its people are not degenerate, they are simply dim-witted. Best shots of the film are of young colts frisking in the bluegrass and a filly, new foaled, whose care and feeding are something to marvel at. There is the blind mare who kicks up a fuss unless, for fear she will kick her, her new filly carries a bell about her neck when in the home stall. These beautiful and sensitive animals are well photographed and, when compared with the two-legged sticks in the film's story, would assuredly make Jonathan Swift slowly nod his head and murmur "I told you so."

George Raft is the gambler who thinks horses are pawns from which to make money, but pretty Ellen Drew teaches him that, after all, horses are human and, before the opus ends, we have a glimpse of the tear-stained Raft optics, grieving for an irreparable harm his unregenerate self had perpetrated. ZaSu Pitts and Hugh Herbert handle what comedy there is to a fading Southern spinster and the gambler's man Friday. Louise Beavers is human as the mammy with a yen for Southern hospitality. There are the usual racing scenes, some of which are eye-catching, but the entire film has a tedious, second-hand fuzz about it.

Familiar Acts Return

The other stage acts are well varied. Al Gordon is back with his independent dogs and again the quadrupeds seem more intelligent than us bipeds, for they are mightily amusing. Carroll and Howe have some rapid-fire cross-talk that is peppy enough and Saul Grauman's company of four cleverly-draped young women introduces an invention of Mr. Grauman's. A staircase becomes the dancing ground for the girls, and, when tapped, plays different notes. The quintet prove it to be a novel mixture of rhythm and melody.

The screen presents an interesting feature in its short on baseball and the contemporary clubs. While the Nats are not represented, there are stars from both leagues in this timely and entertaniing subject.

RICHARD L. COE.

RKO-Keith's

Held over for a well-deserved third week is Deanna Durbin's "Three Smart Girls Grow Up." This time Deanna wears a long dress, pretends to have a yen for a young man, sings incomparably, and comports herself with the casual grace befitting a young lady securely ensconced in the hearts of a fond public.

The story has to do with how Deanna helps her two sisters find happiness, at the risk of seeming slightly mad, what with her rushing around arranging things for them. One is to marry the man the other loves and Deanna lugs home a suitor for the unchosen one and the fiancee feels he might be an improvement on the fiance and so Deanna has to manage the nuptials.

Charles Winninger, as the distraught broker-father, is very fine and gives pathetic dignity to the plight of a father who is too busy making money to attend to the small things which contribute to a state of family happiness. Deanna is the poor little rich girl who has no one to listen to her troubles, who has a fine voice, and who manages to convince you she is growing up to be a more than passable actress.

Director Harry Koster and the rest of the crew who have worked on all the Durbin pictures are a deserving group, for they are keeping the charming child just that. Of her songs we liked best "The Last Rose of Summer" which she sang sitting quietly in a chair with her hands tucked over her tummy like a very nicely un-movie-ish small prima donna.

Disney's genius trails its vivid colors and subtle comedy across the screen with "The Ugly Duckling" tilting a wicked beak, once he is rescued by the swan family after being disavowed by the duck family into which he was born. A man who can make a duck decoy amusing must be a genius.

"Air Waves," a short on radio's progress, a clip on baseball heroes, and a full newsreel round out the bill.

'Dark Victory' Affords Bette Davis One of Her Most Productive Roles

George Brent Leads A Competent Cast; Marion Talley Scores As Stage Headliner

"DARK VICTORY," Warner Brothers picturization of the play by George Emerson Brewer, jr., and Bertram Bloch, adapted to the screen by Casey Robinson starring Bette Davis, with George Brent, Humphrey Bogart, Geraldine Fitzgerald, Ronald Reagan, Henry Travers, Cora Witherspoon, Dorothy Peterson, Virginia Brissac, Charles Richman, Herbert Rawlinson, Leonard Mudie, Fay Helm and Lottie Williams. Directed by Edmund Goulding. Previewed Monday, April 24. At the Earle Theater.

It has been intimated in the space on a previous occasion that "Dark Victory" is not a gay picture. There are moments in it, to be sure, when flashes of comedy streak across the drab pattern of the film, but they are few and far between. This does not mean that "Dark Victory" is a formidable bit of film fare to be shunned by discriminating screen-gazers. Quite the contrary. You will find Bette Davis, more than once an Academy award winner as the best actress of the year, doing an exceptionally deft chore of impersonating a complex and difficult character.

BELL

Miss Davis, in this subject, reveals an astonishing capacity for placing herself in the position of a neurotic young woman, whom the most skillful of the doctors allow less than a year to live. During the few months that intervene between the determination of the acute threat that shadows her life and the hapless day when the "prognosis negative" comes true, Judith Traherne encounters a great and overpowering love. Not much time is left in which to make the most of a life she has squandered. Of what little time there is she makes the most. That is the gist of the story.

Is Tragic Story

Essentially tragic in its every implication, "Dark Victory" affords its star an unexampled opportunity for fine emotional acting. It is not all heavily emotional, even so. There are moments, as I have said, of high frolic and fleeting comedy in the course of the picture. But at base the thing is morbid and more than a little depressing. These normal handicaps to intense box-office appeal are heroically overcome by the skill of Bette Davis' performance. As Judith, she becomes the completely irrational heroine that the authors must have had in mind when they penned their play. I believe that on an earlier occasion I made use of the term "clinical case" as an easy means of describing the character of Judith Traherne. That is precisely what she is. The study is an absorbing one.

While Miss Davis quite dominates this latest of her vehicles, there are other portrayals by supporting players that demand attention and command respect. Foremost among them is the impersonation of Dr. Frederick Steele, the young doctor who falls in love with his patient, offered by George Brent. It is difficult to recall a time when Mr. Brent has been so convincing as he is here. Then there is Humphrey Bogart, cast in the role of a horse-trainer with a rich Irish brogue, who turns in a performance in striking contrast with his usual gangster chore. Mr. Bogart, for once, is a genial fellow, who has only the welfare of his horses and his temperamental and vindictive boss at heart. Geraldine Fitzgerald is another who contributes generously to the rounded excellence of a film fable that is made to appear better than it is by the high quality of the acting that went into its making.

Strong Supporting Cast

Among the supporting players there are numerous others who lend substance and a modicum of believability to a play that could have been completely trashy. Such names as Cora Witherspoon, Charles Richman, in little more than a "bit;" Herbert Rawlinson, not too heavily cast, either; Henry Travers, Dorothy Peterson, Leonard Mudie and Fay Helm should be included in this list.

But overshadowing them all is Bette Davis. If ever a picture was salvaged on the side of meritorious purpose by a single performance, this is it. Perhaps I should say salvaged by two superlative performances, because George Brent is not to be overlooked when the encomiums are being passed out for this one.

Miss Talley Scores Hit

The stage bill at the Earle this week is brief, but of excellent content. In the headline spot, Marion Talley scored an instant and resounding success yesterday afternoon. Her operatic voice was at its best and the songs she sang gave it every play of range and volume to show it off to best advantage. There was nothing "jitterbuggy" about Miss Talley's interval on the stage. Her final encore was "Comin' Through the Rye," and it was thunderously received.

Others on the stage bill include Shane and Armstrong, dancers who contrive to inject a considerable degree of originality into their work; William and Joe Mandel, those inimitable clowning gymnasts, who never fail to click in Washington; Iris Wayne, "the find of the month," who turns out to be one of the best of the acrobatic dancers, and the Roxyettes, who execute some of their most fascinating routines, including the shaky business on the "walking balls."

The usual house features, not forgetting Jo Lombardi's splendidly played overture, round out a bill that will please both those who wish to shed a tear and those who enjoy laughing. That should be fair enough to suit any taste.

Never a Faliure

Leo McCarey, who directed Irene Dunne in "The Awful Truth," produced and directed "Love Affair," currently costarring Miss Dunne and Charles Boyer in a modern romantic drama.

On Her Way to Another 'Oscar'

BETTE DAVIS,

habitual Academy award winner, who bids fair to win another golden statuette for the excellence of her portrayal of the stellar role in "Dark Victory," this week's major screen feature at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater. In this subject, Miss Davis is admirably supported by George Brent, Humphrey Bogart, Geraldine Fitzgerald and a considerable list of other notables

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, April 28.

SCHOOL DEPARTMENT: Terhune Herrick, son of Elinore Herrick of the National Labor Relations Board, wanted to enroll at the University of Virginia, went to one house party there and changed his mind . . . His mother decided to find a college she thought he'd like, and so Mrs. Herrick went through a university directory and selected seven schools. She then began telephoning the presidents of each of those schools . . . After six calls she phoned Hamilton University and asked to speak to President Cowley . . . "Dr. Cowley," she began, "I'm Elinor Herrick of the National Labor Relations Board" . . . "Good Lord," Dr. Crowley replied, "what have I done now?" . . . Mrs. Herrick loved that natural response—and so Terhune Herrick now is a student at Hamilton University.

WAR DEPARTMENT: Adolf Hitler's nephew, Willie Hitler, who now is visiting this country, received a phone call yesterday from the London Daily Express . . . "The conscription law soon will be enacted," Willie was told. "Would you return to England and volunteer?" . . . "I'm not going back to volunteer," replied the 28-year-old Hitler. "I don't see what I can do right now, because I'm sure there won't be a war this year. But if war does come, I'll volunteer—and fight for England."

HELP WANTED DEPARTMENT: The Kings County Court bench, whose calendar has been messed up because one of its judges has been indicted—and because public criticism forced the dismissal of an upstate judge who had been invited to preside—finally secured the extra judge required to conduct the business of the court . . . Judge Nye of Schuyler County and Judge Coon of Cortland County will join the Kings County bench next week to help clear the calendar . . . The visiting jurists, however, are in for their first shock. Because of an oversight, the judges won't find any juries. Some one forgot to draw juries for next week.

MUSIC DEPARTMENT: When Leopold Stokowski arrived in San Francisco to conduct the orchestra there, the local reporters went to his hotel suite to interview him early in the morning . . . Stokowski invited the newspapermen to order breakfast, "to show you men that there's nothing odd about me" . . . "But," asked one reporter, "isn't it odd that you won't have breakfast, too?" . . . "Of course I will," the conductor assured—turned to a waiter and ordered: "Bring me six different kinds of apples."

DRAMA DEPARTMENT: After the Critics Circle dinner on Sunday the critics listened to Tallulah Bankhead speak . . . George Jean Nathan turned to Dick Watts and said: "Tallulah talks like I write—impudent and charming."

LOCAL NEWS: Ed Wynn now is a patient at Midtown Hospital . . . Henri Bernstein and Eve Curie will return to France next month . . . Oscar Roche and Bobby Martin, who owned the defunct La Conga, will serve papers against the new La Conga, because of the name . . . The new proprietors bought the name for $50 at the bankruptcy auction . . . Bobby Lewis, who directed "My Heart's in the Highlands," was asked whether the play is Surrealist. "No," he replied, "it's Surroyanist" . . . Barbara Hutton will leave her son in Florida and return to New York alone.

TRAVEL DEPARTMENT: Franz Lehar, the composer, will come to America shortly. He revealed this to a New York friend who visited him in Vienna last month: Although Hitler has helped revive the popularity of Lehar's "The Merry Widow," the Fuehrer has advised Lehar to prepare to leave . . . "My wife is non-Aryan and so are my collaborators," Lehar explained. "Hitler told me that if he should die or lose control of Germany, then nothing could help me. In the meantime he's doing his best to preyent this, by keeping the popularity of my 'Merry Widow.'"

ART DEPARTMENT: Jo Davidson, the sculptor, attended Muriel King's party for Nazimova Tuesday night and conducted an auction for the benefit of Spanish refugees . . . "What am I bid for a bust I'll make of any person you name?" Davidson announced . . . $500," one of the guests volunteered—and the sculptor snickered . . . "Well," Davidson was asked, "how much do you get, generally?" . . . "$5,000," he informed, "and I don't do things generally."

FASHIONS DEPARTMENT: Hilda Emery Davis, wife of bandleader Meyer Davis, who wrote the theme song played at the wedding of F. D. R., jr.; and Ethel duPont, went to California last month to hear her tone-poem played for the first time . . . Before Mrs. Davis was interviewed by the press, a local editor advised her: "Try to look like a composer" . . . "Really?" shrugged Mr. Davis, "How the hell can a girl look like a composer—with Hattie Carnegie clothes and Lily Dache hats!"

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., April 28.—Peter Meremblum, founder of the California Junior Symphony, which boasts 87 members, has had a field day with the kids in "Music School." There's a swell idea back of the orchestra. It's self-governing, with president, etc. They pay monthly dues, each contributing a share of his wages. So far they're $600 ahead. Their aim is a rehearsal hall of their own. They will tour after a performance in the Hollywood Bowl in June.

HOPPER

Meremblum says Hollywood is unhealthy, because everyone thinks in terms of rackets. Before every rehearsal he gives the children a pep talk on proper living. "Mussolini and Hitler teach their youth how to shoot. I want to show America how teaching good music improves children in all mental attainments."

One violin protege gave his name when introduced to Director Archie Mayo as "Mickey." "Your last name?" asked Mayo. "Oh, what do you care?" the kid snapped back. He didn't get the job. Meremblum told the child's parents why. They said, "But we think that's cute." Now he's taking time out for parents!

Walter Brennan wields the baton for them. Says it's the most difficult part he ever played.

Joe Mankowietz, responsible for some of Metro's biggest successes, is working on John Galsworthy's masterpiece, "The Forsythe Saga," which may be produced in England, and just might be done in two episodes.

Leo Gorcey, one of the Dead End gang, ordered Bert Wheeler to hurry up and change his pants. Said Leo, "How was I to know he was a star? I thought he was my stand-in!" Maybe we'd better tell those kids the facts of life.

The double bill ran into a snag in Nutley, N. J., when George Siegel caught his 16-year-old hopeful coming in at midnight. "But, Daddy, I went to a double feature and it's just over." He's headed a movement to boycott them in that State.

Jackie Cooper's next picture will be Booth Tarkington's "Seventeen" and 500 prints will be released on Jackie's seventeenth birthday next September.

Ruth Donnelly and Guy Kibbee are wedded again in "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" and are parents of eight children. They've had 38 during their screen marital life. Shame on you, Ruth, with a "Miss" on your name, too.

'Midnight' Is New Feature At Columbia

Colbert and Ameche, With Star Cast, Are At Best in Comedy

"Midnight" is strictly on the sunny side! This feathery concoction of laughs and fabulous adventure in La Paree, starting its second downtown engagement, is what the doctor ordered for moviegoers who feel a bit ga-ga and in need of a lift. All customers are leaving the Columbia smiling.

A busted American gold-digger and a Hungarian-Parisian taxi driver are the heroine and hero of this frivolling opus. They're played with inestimable lightness and polish by Claudette Colbert and Don Ameche. Down to her last pawn ticket is Claudette, who rolls into Paris third class, with the evening gown on her back the only shred of clothes she possesses in the world.

But by next morning Claudette is ensconced in the Ritz, with trunks full of clothes, a car as long as the Washington Monument, a 50,000-franc bank account, and the title of baroness. (Did we say Claudette was a gold digger? 'Scoose. We should have said excavator.) By the week-end Claudette is a guest in a chauteau near Versailles, has a young and handsome champagne king (Francis Lederer) on the hook as a matrimonial prospect. Incidentally, she's swiped Francis from a married Parisian society woman, played by Mary Astor.

Flies in the Ointment

The No. 1 fly in the ointment (or taxicab) is Don Ameche, who's given Claudette free rides all around Paris while she was unsuccessfully trying to land a berth as a night club singer. No. 2 fly in the ointment is Mary Astor, who naturally resents losing such a priceless offside swain as Lederer, has her suspicions of "Baroness" Claudette, figures a way of exposing her. Then along comes Don, in a hired evening suit, and has himself announced as Claudette's baron. Aspirin and allonal!

The wind-up is a courtroom scene to end all courtroom scenes. Since Claudette is in the spot of trying to get a divorce from a man to whom she really isn't married. The fade-out is one of the sharpest and gayest ever. We'd be a meanie to tell you about it.

Glowing direction, a cast of America's best acting folk, are the reasons for "Midnight's" wonderful diversion value. Also, script writers with a fine sense of irresponsibility. The whole business must have left the Hays office with deserved jitters. But the dexterous touch, irreproachable taste, shimmering gayety—given these in direction and script—even a fuss-budget couldn't fuss with trick-angled fun.

Cast Excels

La Colbert seems lovelier, more frolicsome, in every picture. If she were suddenly produced as a "European discovery," we wager she'd be hailed as too marvelous for words. Pretty swell, too, is Don Ameche, all a-swing with vim and monkey-shines. Ditto for John Barrymore, who'll never grow old, no matter what the calendar headline says. Ditto for Francis Lederer (tall, dark and handy), whom we should see more in topside parts. He's one of the few great actors in Hollywood, made to order for a South American historical classic, such as the story of Bolivar. Ditto again for Mary Astor, playing a femme galante in the spirit of the Faubourg St. Germain.

If "Midnight" didn't have such a terrific amusement impact, we'd feel like giving the call to "Fashion Forecast," the only intelligently done, truly amusing and really informative style feature we've ever seen. There's an excellent Pete Smith short showing surf boating combined with fishing. The newsreel is full of war jitters. Yours for less and inferior war jitters. Has anybody seen a dove?

MARY HARRIS.

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, April 28 (1935).—Discovered Edward G. Robinson on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot, and, of course, I had to do a little personal sleuthing. He was there to talk to Louis B. Mayer about starting a picture immediately. Interest centers around Eddie since "Confessions of a Nazi Spy," for he proved more than ever his devotion to the anti-Nazi cause when he accepted a fairly unimportant role in a picture that is continuing to astonish even blase Hollywood.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Eddie will do a dramatic yarn called "Blackmail" for the M-G-M-ers in which a prosperous man is the victim of a group of underworld racketeers. They make life so unbearable that he goes to prison to pay for a crime committed in his younger days. Henry Potter will direct. I gather from this that "Brother Orchid" at Warner Brothers has been postponed.

Nearly fell over when I heard 13-year-old Jane Withers has slimmed down like a glamour girl, lost 10 pounds and is heading for more adolescent roles. Jane, who really never had to depend on being just a cute little girl for her place among the first ten box-office stars, is growing too fast for the typical child roles. But she's such a clever little entertainer with her singing and dancing, she doesn't have to worry about growing up. Her next will be "Boy Friend," followed by "The Chicken Wagon Family." Then, they tell me, Miss Withers will step out as a high school girl—more or less growing up on the screen the same way Universal is handling Deanna Durbin.

After all the fanfare about Gene Tierney, the pretty stage actress, she was taken out of "Coast Guard" today and Joan Perry was given the top role opposite Randolph Scott. Miss Tierney, it appears, is too young to be convincing. I am glad Joan is getting a break, for I think she is one of the most attractive girls in Hollywood, and heaven knows every time she's had any sort of a chance she's come through 100 per cent. Her last picture, "Good Girls Go to Paris," is responsible for giving her this new movie.

Plain clothes policemen were spotted through the crowds both inside and out at Warners' Beverly Theater at the preview of "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" waiting for any possible demonstration. But, luckily for the previewers, nothing of a serious nature took place. The reaction among those of us inside who saw the picture, however, was astounding. Prolonged applause followed the final scene and then the audience sat still, as though so impressed they were loath to leave the theater. Everyone—stars, directors, producers—was in a thoughtful mood. Some felt Warners might have colored the situation—but I am assured the story told is a true account of conditions.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: The pretty girl with Bert Wheeler at the Versailles resembled his estranged wife, Sally Haines, but wasn't; Edgar Selwyn, having handed over his Alpine drive house to his divorced wife, Ruthie, has now bought himself a new Beverly Hills mansion. Is Edgar contemplating marriage? Katherine Aldrich dividing her time between Bob Ritchie and Jimmie Stewart. Not bad for a newcomer! Jackie Coogan, center of a gay party at Grace Hayes Lodge, to celebrate completion of his wife's movie, "Million Dollar Legs;" Buster Crabbe, Frances Robinson, Eddie Arnold and Jane Wyman among those who took part in a burlesque fan dance staged by the effervescent Coogan; Belle Baker, cafe songstress, entertaining practically the whole Warner studio following the "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" preview.

Anatole Litvak and Miriam Hopkins were in a party including the Richard Barthelmesses, Ernest Lubitsches, Hal Wallis and Louise Fazenda, the John Garfields and many others; Mary Brian escorted by Nino Martini and Mervyn Leroy in a party with Loretta Young were among the merrymakers. Tyrone Power and his bride, the guests of the Charles Boyers at the preview, with Charlie and Annabella lapsing into their native French every now and then; Hank and Frances Fonda climb aboard a Pan-American clipper Sunday for a South American holiday. He returns for "Drums Along the Mohawk"; Victor Fleming remains with the "Gone With the Wind" company until he finishes the scene where Melanie gives birth to her baby; Bill Powell, looking mighty well, at the fights with Danny Winkler and his girl friend, Jean Rogers; Johnny Burke, Bing Crosby's song writer, heading for New York on his first visit in years; Eddie Norris, getting out of a sick bed to join a group of fliers who do a stunt at the S. F. fair.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow.

Your Figure Madame!

—By Ida Jean Kain.

Faults of Posture Fall Into Three General Patterns

NEXT WEEK is Camp National Posture Week and will be duly noted in schools and colleges throughout the country. An excellent plan it is, too, for an estimated 95 per cent of us have poor postures, and the emphasis given to posture by a program of this magnitude should certainly awaken the individual's interest in correcting faults which needlessly detract from health and appearance.

Chairman of the nationally observed week is S. H. Camp, of Jackson, Mich., the pioneer in posture correction, who recently sent the now famous "Transparent Woman" on tour to show the close relation between internal health and external beauty. Being able to see right through the lady made it easier for the average person to appreciate what happens when muscles important to posture lose tone.

Sagging of the abdominal muscles pulls the backbone forward, the shoulder blades go out in back and the neck and shoulders go out in front. Then with the middle of the spine curved in (sway-back), and the lower part curved out, there you are, looking almost like the letter S.

Three General Types

Of course that is an exaggeration, for it is posture at its worst. However, there are three general types of faulty posture, which include all too many feminine figures. Let's hope that yours is not among them!

Suppose we take a mother and her two daughters.

The mother has been very busy, hasn't paid much attention to posture, and has slumped in the middle. This means she has decreased in height and increased in width; you get wider when you settle.

Daughter Ann is a stenographer, and has bent over her work for so many hours a day that she has acquired a round upper back, one shoulder is slightly higher than the other and abdominal muscles are too relaxed.

The other daughter is too thin, and she has what is known as fatigue posture—it used to be called the debutante slouch! She has a concave chest, a very rounded upper back and a dropped stomach.

All Need Exercise

While the posture faults and causes differ, all three figures particularly need exercises which will contract and strengthen the stretched and weakened muscles of the abdomen. This should be the first step in their program, as it is in the average program to correct posture. It is necessary that the abdominal muscles be strengthened.

The mother, who is short and stocky, also needs stretching exercises which will pull her slim through the middle and banish that settled look. Strengthening the abdominal muscles helps to raise the chest, and this is extremely important in the correction of the fatigue and occupational postures of the daughters. The tall, thin girl may also need a scientific support to keep the abdominal organs in proper position until the abdominal muscles have been strengthened. Tall girls who are very thin often have a tendency to "dropped stomach," and this condition affects the digestion and makes them thinner.

If You're 50 Start to Hula, Huapala Advises

Teacher of Hawaiian Dance Calls It Certain Rejuvenator

By Genevieve Reynolds.

IF YOU are past 50 and life seems to stretch into an unchanging, humdrum existence, shove your rocking chair aside and take up the Hawaiian hula. For this dance is the rejuvenator of youth, maintains Huapala (Miss Vivienne Mader), instructor at a local dancing studio.

Huapala, a native New York girl, is a pioneer of authentic Hawaiian hula. She became interested in hula during a visit to the Hawaiian Islands. While there she studied under Helen Deaha Beamer, famous native artist. So well did Vivienne Mader interpret the soul and technique of the hula that the natives dubbed her Huapala, which means "sweetheart." By command she danced for the Princess Kalanianaole of Honolulu and the Prince and Princess di Savoia, of Italy, on their recent trip to America. Before living in Hawaii, Huapala studied with Ruth St. Denis, Martha Graham and Constantin Kobeleff.

First to Teach Dance

Feeling that the dance has been misinterpreted as something sensuous and vulgar, Huapala is making a genuine effort to correct this impression. She is the first person ever to dance the hula at Town Hall and the Guild Theater in New York City. And she is the first to teach the hula in Washington and the United States.

"Hula is the perfect dance for the older woman, who has not lived actively," said Huapala, "because it is not too strenuous and it tones up unused muscles. The rhythmic motions soothe and quiet taunt nerves. Specifically, it relaxes the entire body. Besides relieving nervous tension, it brings renewed vigor.

"In addition to being a good nerve tonic, hula slices off inches from the hips and waistline. By constantly bending and swaying, surplus fat soon disappears and the waistline and hips gradually are smoothed down to the desired proportions."

Dance Teaches Poise

Huapala recommends hula as the panacea for awkwardness and the lack of poise. "The figure," she said, "changes with the techniques and various dances that you learn. In that way fluidity of movement and grace is obtained."

Before teaching any of the basic steps, Huapala corrects all posture defects. A slouchy, incorrect posture, she believes not only spoils the appearance of a dance, but makes a woman seem much older and less vitally alive. After posture comes grace and expressiveness. She places much importance on hand movements. To obtain this quality, she suggests special exercises and movements. "By learning to express moods and emotions with the hands in the dance," she explained, "the same adaptability and flexible movements become a part of a woman's instinctive gestures in everyday life—and thus grace becomes natural and spontaneous rather than forced.

Hula acts as a beautifier in that it stimulates and exhilarates the older woman by making her forget her troubles and boredom. "In order to dance the hula, the woman must inject herself into the mood of the dance—and this requires concentration. And while thinking about the melody, words and expression of the form, the woman forgets her knotty problems.

Pants for Chic Hostesses

If you want to make a big splash in your social world this spring, think twice about the hostess pajama. New York's mightiest designers have revived hostess trousers and sleek slack suits for dinner wear, informal bridge parties and for general lounging and loafing after 6 o'clock. The striking pajama, above, combines a collarless shirtwaist, guileless of trimming, with splashy printed trousers

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay.

'The Photographer Is Here'

President—Girls! Girls! The photographer is in a hurry. Now let's all line up around the tea table so the flowers will show——

Mrs. Flytie—I simply can't have my picture taken. Look at my hair!

Mrs. Lightcap—Look at me with this last year's hat!

Mrs. Goode—I don't want to have my picture in the paper.

President — Now, everybody come in around the table——

Photographer—I'm sorry, but I was told to get only four people.

President—You don't mean you're not going to take the whole club!

Photographer—Well, it wouldn't show——

Mrs. Joyner—Let him take the officers. That would only be seven.

Photographer—That's too crowded.

President—Well, I'm perfectly willing to stay out of it——

Mrs. Goode—No, let me stay out. I don't want any newspaper notoriety.

Mrs. Yeaman—I'm the one who ought to stay out. I'm only the second vice president.

Chorus—No! No!

Mrs. Doodle—Now, a bunch of men would never act this way.

Dr. Nannie B. Hopper—They'd act just as bad! In fact, worse!

President—Well, suppose we just have the tea committee in the picure—and then Mrs. Goode; she's the chairman of entertainment.

Mrs. Goode—No, no! I don't want my picture in the paper!

President—Come on, now, girls. Mrs. Flytie, Mrs. Lightcap——

Mrs. Flytie—Oh, no. Look at my hair. Anyway, why don't we have some of the better-looking members——

President—Come on, now. That's right, Mrs. Joyner; stand right there.

Mrs. Lightcap—If someone had told me, I wouldn't have worn this old hat——

President—Oh, yes, and Mrs. Goode——

Mrs. Goode—Really, I don't like all this notoriety. Say, how would it be for me to be pouring tea?

Mrs. Nitter—Wait, now. We want the sandwiches to show—— Oh, say; Mrs. Piney ought to be in the picture. She made all those olive and cheese sandwiches——

Mrs. Piney—Oh, no! No!

President—Oh, yes! Say, Mr. Photographer, couldn't you have five in the picture?

Photographer — We-l-l, maybe there's room for one more on the end . . . Now, if you ladies'll move a little closer and more to the front . . .

Mrs. Joyner—I want to be in the back. These pictures always make me look so big in the hips. You stand in front, Mrs. Lightcap.

Mrs. Lightcap—But look at this old hat——

Mrs. Goode—I don't like this sort of thing. Say, now, if I sit down the teapot'll be in front of me.

Mrs. Nitter—Let's move the teapot.

Photographer—Now just try to look as natural as possible . . . Oh, yes, and if the lady in the center will take off her glasses——

Mrs. Joyner—But I always wear my glasses——

Photographer—Now then, just be natural and talk to each other.

Mrs. Flytie—What shall we say?

Photographer—Now then, let's have a nice little smile——

Mrs. Goode—I always look so silly when I smile——

President—Say, Mr. Photographer, are you sure Mrs. Piney, on the end here, will show in the picture? We don't want her cut off——

Photographer—Now then, all set. Ready——

Mrs. Lightcap—Wait! I know I'll jump when that bulb goes off!

Mrs. Joyner—I just know I'll have my mouth open.

Photographer—Now let's have a little smile——

Mrs. Goode—When is this going to be in the paper?

Photographer — All set now. Ready . . .

President—Mrs. Nitter! Mrs. Nitter! Wait! Stop!

Photographer—Go!

President—Oh, it's too late!

Mrs. Nitter—Did I walk in front of the camera?

Photographer—Yes! Oh, well, I'll try another plate.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Absurdly, Unwarrantedly Jealous of Good Husband, Wife Asks Cause and Cure of Nightmare

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been married a little over a year to a man who is 15 years older than myself. I was married once before, to a man my own age, who was extremely jealous of me; so jealous, in fact, that it caused us to part. When I met the man to whom I am now married, I was not wildly in love with him, and still had a "hang-over" from my first husband. But I decided to marry him and forget the past.

Now, here is the problem: I find that as time goes on I am becoming jealous of my husband. People would think that it ought to be the other way around, since he is so many years my senior; but, unfortunately, I am the person afflicted. It is just that, too—an affliction. I have had absolutely no cause whatsoever to be jealous and suspicious of my husband. Nevertheless, if he is five minutes late, I ask him if he was with a woman, etc. At first, he just laughed at me, but now he says that he is getting tired of my "nagging," and that if he ever does see another woman he cares for, he will tell me about it and leave me.

I don't want to be this way. I am much more attractive than he is, my friends say; and there is absolutely no reason on earth for me to be jealous of him. I suppose I am beginning to care for him. He is good and kind to me in every possible way, but is not very affectionate or demonstrative toward me, so perhaps that is why I am so absurdly jealous. I want to correct this condition. If he so much as comments upon another woman's hat, I go into hysterics and just can't bear for him to even talk about women in his office.

Will you please tell me how I can overcome this—that is, if you think it can be overcome. I am so unhappy and miserable when he is away from me that I scarcely know what to do. The only alternative that I can think of is to leave him; and I love him so terribly that I certainly don't want to do that. So what do you advise? Sincerely ELINOR.

Neurotic Manifestation

DEAR ELINOR: The pronounced change in temperature of matrimonial invironment may be responsible, in part, for your current attack of hysterically jealous chills and fevers. Your first marriage probably represented a sort of torrid emotional zone, in which you were gradually conditioned to expect and to react to extravagant ardor and almost savage intensity of lover-like devotion. Your second marriage has transported you into a vastly more temperate clime, and you have not yet adjusted yourself to the change of air.

No doubt the inevitable adjustment has been rendered doubly difficult by virtue of the fact that you are just beginning to fall "wildly in love" with your husband. Because you didn't love him at the time of marriage, nor for some months afterward, you were not prepared to treat with the relationship on a basis of mutual reciprocity of give-and-take. You blithely (and erroneously assumed that the emotional advantages were to be all on your side, just as they had been in your first marriage; that your husband would be the beggar of love, and you the queenly dispenser of favors.

You counted, more or less unawarely, no doubt, on finding him a somewhat milder replica of your first husband: one who would be more rational and manageable, but always in suppliant subjugation to your charms. But when you found him standing firm as the rock of Gilbraltar on a granite foundation of basic self esteem, pursuing the even tenor of his ways in quiet self possession, ready to live and let live, to render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's, your anticipation of royal supremacy was blighted at its roots. A reaction of frantic jealousy, of all-pervading uneasiness, set in.

It gives one to wonder, indeed, how much you may have been responsible for your first husband's neurotic behavior. Essentially, you may be (and probably are) psychologically rather infantile, as yet—tending toward the frigid side in your emotional manifestations; not yet capable of participating in a love relationship on a mature basis of co-equal co-operation; neither able nor altogether willing to give as much as you hope to receive. In your association with your first husband, you have kept him so love-starved, in body and spirit, that his tormented and tormenting reactions were inevitable, and more indicative of failure on your part than neurosis on his part.

As one authority on marital relationships point out; "There are certain fundamental prerequisites for a happy marriage: both partners in a happy love relation should possess an objective sense of self esteem, a well-defined social feeling, and both should be completely free of any neurotic striving for prestige at the expense of the opposite sex. Mental maturity, physical health, and psychological independence in outlook, a knowledge of the art of love . . . a mature sense of social responsibility, the willingness to grow, to co-operate, to suffer sometimes and to share always the disappointments and the joys of life, these are the foundations of success in the solution of the love problem of every-day life."

When a person is jealous, it means that he feels insecure emotionally, and hence socially. Your first husband may have been jealous because he never knew where he stood in the relationship. He may have feared always that he might lose you (which eventually he did), because that he never really came close to you, as I imagine he never did, since you were probably unwilling or unable fully to identify your life with his. I believe it is not much to assume that the fault-within-yourself which wrecked your first marriage is appearing in different guise to threaten your second marriage.

I think you are (all unawarely) tainted with a "neurotic striving for prestage," at the expense of your marriage partner's pride of spirit, and that your present husband's impregnable inner security has baffled and defeated this ill-advised subconscious aim. Because he does not dance like a moth before the flame of your sexual appeal, you feel that you lack adequate powers to compel and to hold him. And you fancy, in a sick-minded way, that such power must lie in the hands of other women who are out-maneuvering you.

You are living through a painful experience, but I think you should chalk it up on the credit side of the ledger, as growing pains. I imagine that you never would have discovered your capacity for love, if you had not come in contact with a lovable personality so strong that it could not be dominated, and which will have to be accepted—if at all—on a liberal basis of absolute co-equality. The only way to cure your jealousy is to outgrow it, by advancing your psychological development to a mature level: which is to say, by growing through understanding and exercising your emotional faculties as a whole.

This may be a problem for a psychiatrist or psycho-analyst (in which case I refer you to the Washington Institute of Mental Hygiene, 1464 Columbia road northwest); or it may be that you can find the answers for yourself, through reading Dr. W. Beran Wolfe's "How to Be Happy Though Human," (quoted above), as well as Florence Guy Seabury's, "Love Is a Challenge."

One last word: In some cases, where a married person is poisonously jealous without warrant, it has been found that he is projecting upon his mate certain erotic extravaganzas which exist in his own fancy. That is to say, he holds his partner guilty of behavior which he entertains a suppressed desire to practice himself. So, it is remotely possible that you may have been guilty of flagrant misbehavior in your first marriage, giving your first husband sound cause to be jealous; and that now, being somewhat older and wiser in the laws of cause-and-effect, you are behaving more circumspectly, without inner conviction in the matter, and giving expression to erotic tendencies in other, and equally marriage-destroying, ways. If this theory applies, by all means see a psychiatrist; as the motivating factors are remediable when properly treated. M. H.

Overcrowded New Yorkers Worry About Influx of Fair Visitors

New York, April 28.

LET ME SEE—something is about due to happen, or bust, and I can't quite remember what. Let me look at that messy desk pad. Oh yes—why, to be sure. April 30 the New York World Fair is to be flung open with welcome on the local mat, and come again at the exit.

This fair thing is a fascinating study. Every woman in the country, at her broadest-minded, can realize how this stupendous, etc., project has dominated the gotham scene these many months, and will for more months to come. It will cost at least $155,000,000—(which isn't alfalfa, especially when the world is acting up at its very feet. It has engaged the finest talents available in this country, as well as the services of many thousands of men and women who need jobs badly in these parlous times. It covers 1,300 acres of reclaimed swamp and dump. It is, in a word, something. For other words, page Hollywood.

ALICE HUGHES

But what is the human angle of this enormous dido, from the viewpoint of those of us who live and labor in this overcrowded, neurotic ad screaming town? Any amateur psychologist can understand that we old settlers may be suffering already from what may be called "Fair Weariness"—even on the brink of opening day. For months we have eaten, drunk, slept, dreamed and nightmared World's Fair. In addition, those of us who live in the heart of Manhattan Island dread the influx of relatives and bosom pals—not because we love them less, but because we love a tiny bit of personal peace and freedom more, in such an emergency.

Remember, this means no lack of hospitality in our warm and pulsing hearts. We've got a great show, and we want everyone to see it. The city is slick and clean and open-handed (the better to grab you with, my darling). At the same time, thousands of citizens wish that they were in Alaska, poking around for gold or something. We are not cads and caddesses. Just a little tired.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—In reference to the above, the first bit of World's Fair spoofing between covers is a small book called "Trylongs and Perisites," by anonymous authors whose names I know, but can't reveal. It ribbingly tells various means and ways of escaping from distant relations, old college chums and things who try to foist themselves on local citizens, rent free, while peering at the big show. Some of it is mighty good kidding. Some of it is deadly serious under the comic mask.

Special Train to Leave at 7 A. M. Tomorrow, Carrying Practically Every Washington Notable; Peru's Envoy Is Apparently Lone Exception

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

WHEN THE ELEVEN GATES swing wide to welcome the universe tomorrow at the opening of the New York World's Fair of 1939, Washington dignitaries and diplomats by the score will flock in to see the spectacle and to witness the re-enactment of the inauguration of George Washington as first President of the United States.

Virtually every train pulling out of Union Station the past week has carried its quota of local notables headed for "The World of Tomorrow built with the Tools of Today." But the biggest train-load of all is scheduled to leave in the morning at 7 o'clock, filled with Senators, Representatives, wives of justices of the Supreme Court, and wives and children of members of Congress.

Representative Sol Bloom, director general of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission, who has done more than any other one person to make America "Washington conscious" in recent years, will have most of his Congressional colleagues along with him when the ceremony glorifying the Father of Our Country and the unveiling of the 65-foot statue of Washington goes on tomorrow.

The Cabinet circle also will be well represented in the throng that will hear President Roosevelt and Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, of New York, deliver the opening speeches. The Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., the Secretary of War and Mrs. Harry H. Woodring, Attorney General Frank Murphy, the Postmaster General and Mrs. James A. Farley, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace and Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins will be on hand for the event.

British Ambassador To Be There

As to which diplomats will attend—well, the list would be shorter, almost negligible in fact, if the ones were named who won't be there. The British Ambassador, Sir Ronald Lindsay, left yesterday for New York and will be very much in the picture at tomorrow's opening. The Argentine Ambassador and Senora de Espil will leave today for New York and will attend the ceremony. Still others, in addition to those I mentioned in a recent column, who will be on hand for the event are the Italian Ambassador, Prince Colonna; the Chilean Charge d'Affaires and Senora de Gaitua, and the Minister of Panama and Senora de Boyd.

Truth is, offhand, I can't think of a single chief of mission who won't be present for tomorrow's event except the Peruvian Ambassador, Don Manuel Freyre y Santander, and he will be going up later when the Peruvian exhibition is formally opened.

Mrs. Owen J. Roberts and Mrs. Hugo Black are two more top-flight notables who will be present for tomorrow's super-colossal event. They are going up on the Congressional special that will make the run to New York in 4 hours 5 minutes, with but one stop at Pennsylvania Station before going directly to the fair station on Long Island.

Many Senators On Passenger List

A listing of all those scheduled to go from the Senate and House circles reads very much like the Congressional Directory, but here are a few: Senator and Mrs. Charles O. Andrews, Senator and Mrs. Henry F. Ashurst, Senator and Mrs. Warren Austin, Senator and Mrs. Homer T. Bone, Senator and Mrs. William J. Bulow, Senator and Mrs. James F. Byrnes, Senator and Mrs. Dennis Chavez, Senator and Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark, Senator and Mrs. D. Worth Clark, Mrs. James J. Davis and her son, James J. Davis, jr.; Senator and Mrs. Sheridan Downey, Senator and Mrs. Allen J. Ellender, Mrs. Walter F. George, Senator Ernest W. Gibson and Miss Doris Gibson, Senator Joseph Guffey and Miss Paulette Guffey, Senator and Mrs. Carl Hatch, Senator and Mrs. Clyde Herring.

Senator and Mrs. Lister Hill will be in the Fair-going group, as will Senator and Mrs. James H. Hughes, Senator and Mrs. Edwin C. Johnson, Senator and Mrs. William H. King, Senator and Mrs. Josh Lee, Senator and Mrs. Ernest Lundeen, Senator Francis T. Maloney, Senator and Mrs. Pat McCarran, Senator and Mrs. James M. Mead, Mrs. John E. Miller, Senator and Mrs. Sherman Minton, Senator and Mrs. James E. Murray, Senator and Mrs. Gerald P. Nye, Senator and Mrs. John H. Overton, Senator and Mrs. Claude Pepper, Senator and Mrs. Clyde M. Reed, Senator and Mrs. H. H. Schwartz, Senator and Mrs. Morris Sheppard, Senator and Mrs. William H. Smathers, Senator and Mrs. Elmer Thomas, Senator and Mrs. Charles W. Tobey, Senator John G. Townsend, jr., Senator and Mrs. Wallace H. White, and Senator and Mrs. Alexander Wiley.

Two hundred and fifty members of the House, many of them accompanied by their wives, will be on the high-speed electric train leaving tomorrow morning for the Fair.

Speaker Bankhead To Be on Train

Very important passengers will be the Speaker of the House and Mrs. William B. Bankhead; Representative Sam Rayburn, the House Majority Leader, and Representative Sol Bloom who will be accompanied by Mrs. Bloom and their daughter, Miss Vera Bloom.

Still others among the large House contingent who will be on the "Congressional Special" headed for Grover Whalen's Wonder will be Representative and Mrs. Bruce Barton, Representative and Mrs. Joseph W. Bryns, jr., Representative and Mrs. Ralph E. Church, Representative and Mrs. Harry B. Coffee, Representative and Mrs. Robert L. Doughton, Representative Behr G. Holmes, Representative and Mrs. Lyndon Johnson, Representative and Mrs. Richard M. Kleberg, Representative and Mrs. Fritz G. Lanham, Representative Robert L. Mouton, Representative and Mrs. John E. Rankin, Representative and Mrs. Harry R. Sheppard and many more.

The Congressional party will be guests of the World's Fair organization during the day. They will return tomorrow evening, leaving by special train at 8:45 p. m., and return to Washington in about four hours.

Notables Fill Boxes at Folk Festival

Mrs. Claude Swanson And Hazens Among Enthusiastic Guests

Nicely studded with official and social notables wast last evening's throng that filled Constitution Hall for the second evening's performance of the National Folk Festival. The boxes forming Washington's own "Golden Horseshoe" had their quoto of representatives from the Cabinet, residential circles, the service set, and District officialdom.

Enthusiasm ran high through the evening as Indians swathed in feathers, furs and buckskin; square dancers from 'way out West, lumberjacks, balladeers, fiddlers and singers of spirituals put on a show that brought forth thunders of applause and demands for encores time and time again.

Secretary of State To Attend Tonight

An even larger group of celebrities will be in boxes this evening when the Folk Festival comes to its colorful close. Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull will be there, and will have in their party Norman Davis, head of the American Red Cross. A sizeable number from the Diplomatic Corps—about all, in fact, who have not gone to New York for the World's Fair opening—will be present, and as has been the case for each performance, there will be scores of residential notables in the crowd.

Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, was in last evening's audience. In her party were Miss Mary Patten and Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Brandt. Arriving shortly before the Town Crier rang his bell for attention and opened the show were District Commissioner and Mrs. Melvin C. Hazen, who entertained a box party.

Commissioner McCoach Arrives With Party

Also coming in with a group of friends was the District Engineer Commissioner, Col. David McCoach, jr., who had with him Mrs. McCoach, Maj. David S. Rumbough, Mrs. George Patton, and Mrs. Charles H. Tompkins. The newly named member of the Securities and Exchange Commission, Leon Henderson, arrived with Mrs. Henderson and Dr. Isador Lubin.

Still others in the crowd—to mention but a few—were Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, of the Social Security Board, who was accompanied by her son and several friends from out of town; Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, Miss Carolyn Chantry, and Mr. and Mrs. Fraklyn Waltman, who entertained guests in their box.

Mrs. Tuckerman also entertained at luncheon on Thursday at the Republican Women's Club, when her guests included Mrs. William N. Boak, Mrs. James Catrroll Frazer, Mrs. Lindsay Russell, Mrs. Austin Kautz, Miss Lydia Loring, Mrs. Virginia White Speel, Miss Laura Harlan, Miss Catherine Goodwin, Mrs. Hamilton Lamar, Miss Margaret Gage and Mrs. Brady Ruttencutter.

Mrs. Rustin, who arrived on April 21 from her home in Charlottesville, Va., for a visit with Dean and Mrs. Powell, will return the middle of next week to her Virginia home.

SENORA DE VILLA

Erasto M. Vila And Bride to Make Home in Washington

Extreme simplicity marked the wedding yesterday in the Chapel of the Carmelite Convent of Miss Olga Patterson, daughter of the late Guillermo Patterson y de Jauregui, one-time Cuban Ambassador here, to Erasto M. Villa, Third Secretary of the Argentine embassy.

The ceremony took place at 12:30 and was followed by a buffet luncheon given by the Argentine Ambassador and Senora de Espil. The former served as best man at the wedding. The bride wore a Maggy Rouff model of navy blue silk, a shade particularly becoming to her light blonde hair, made with a blue and white printed panel down the front. Her blue straw hat was piped in white.

Mrs. Knowlton Bride's Sole Attendant

The matron of honor, and only attendant of the bride, was Mrs. Robert A. Knowlton, who wore a black silk frock splashed with a design of yellow flowers, a three-quarter length coat, and a natural straw hat trimmed with black velvet ribbon. Ricardo Siri and Miguel Juirno, of the Argentine embassy served as ushers. The church was decorated with Easter lilies and white snapdragons.

Tfter the luncheon, the couple left for Florida. As her going-away costume the bride chose a black tailored suit and hat to match. The couple will make their home in Washington.

Yesterday's wedding was the culmination of a romance which began several years ago, when the bride was serving as her father's hostess at the embassy in Washington. After his death she went to Brussels to live with her brother-in-law and sister, M. and Mme. Ernest Schlatter. Their wedding at the Cuban embassy here in 1935 was an outstanding event of the season. M. Schlatter is with the Swiss diplomatic service.

Cuban Envoy Among Wedding Guests

Mme. Villa returned to Washington several weeks ago and has been staying with Mr. and Mrs. Knowlton while making plans for her wedding. Mrs. Knowlton is the former Rebecca Trucco, daughter of Manuel Trucco, who until recently was Chilean Ambassador to the United States.

Among the small group of friends who witnessed the ceremony yesterday were Senora de Espil, and the Cuban Ambassador, Dr. Pedro Martinez Fraga. Others included the Counselor of the Cuban Embassy and Senora de Baron, the Counselor of the Argentine Embassy and Senora de Ghiraldo; the Counselor of the Mexican Embassy and Senora dee Fuentes; Laurence Bungardeanu of the Rumanian Legation; Miss Stellita Stapleton, Mrs. Russell Snodgrass and her sister, Miss Evelyn Walker, Mrs. Millard West, Miss Sibilla Skidelsky, William Ryan, Mrs. Merton English and Mrs. Burke Elbrick.

Gen. and Mrs. Langhorne will leave tomorrow to return to their home in Chicago.

Brennan May Open Irish Fair Pavilion

Now that the Irish Premier, Eamon De Valera, is not coming to this country after all, it will probably be Minister Robert Brennan who will formally open the Irish pavilion at the World's Fair on May 14. However, complete plans have not yet been made. Members of the legation have been working since before Christmas on Mr. De Valera's itinerary, and are very much disappointed that the premier had to cancel his visit.

Mrs. Brennan has likewise canceled the tea she was to have given in his honor on Monday, May 8.

The Hunt Country

By Nina Carter Tabb

STEEPLECHASE fans will start for Maryland this morning, for in the Worthington Valley near Baltimore the famous Maryland Hunt Cup will be run at 4 o'clock. Automobiles will jam all the roads long before race time, and there is a special landing field for the many who will go by plane. The course is looking green and clean swept, and the natural grand stand on the side of the hill will be crowded with a gay and colorful crowd long before the race is called.

THE ENTRIES include the best timber toppers in the country. Blockade, last year's winner, is again the favorite today. This horse is owned by Mrs. E. Read Beard and will be ridden by A. F. Caldwell.

The other 14 entries are Cornwell II, owned and ridden by Daniel H. Sangster; Justa Racket, owned and ridden by Hugh J. O'Donovan; Coq Bruyere, owned by John Strawbridge and ridden by R. P. Hamilton; Estadin, owend by Mrs. Elizabeth C. Buck and ridden by John Bosley, jr.; Deflation, owned by Dr. Walter Wicks and ridden by Paul Reid; Or Else, owned by W. F. Cochran, jr., and ridden by Sidney Waters, jr.; Cherry Brook, owned by J. E. Leiper, jr., and ridden by Frank H. Powers, jr.; Black Sweep, owned by Turner Wiltshire and ridden by Louis Murdock; Music Mountain, owned by Mrs. Eva Stewart Spilman; Comeonhome, owned by J. W. Y. Martin and ridden by Benjamin Griswold 3d; Postman Home, owned by Mrs. Frank M. Gould and ridden by John S. Harrison; King Ladislaus, owned by W. M. Hampson and ridden by Louis Merriman, jr.; Easy Mark, owned and ridden by Jerry Webb; Lucier, owned by Maurice Power and ridden by James C. Evans.

MR. AND MRS. Sterling Larrabee will throw open their place, Oakwood, near Warrenton, to the public today and tomorrow for the benefit of the Fauquier County Hospital in Warrenton. The garden at Oakwood is at its prime, with tulips and lilac in full bloom. Peacocks strutting over the lawn will add more color, and there are white pigeons and goldfish in the garden.

Oakwood is so called because it is set in a grove of large oak trees, which are 250 years old. The original party of the house was built in 1790 by Col. Martin Pickett, on land granted him in lieu of pay for his services during the Revolution. It was added to in 1805 by his daughter, who married Judge John Scott. The place has been owned by the Scott family ever since. Mrs. Larrabee, the present owner, being related to the Scotts.

The estate is 4 miles wets of Warrenton, on the old Waterloo turnpike, an enjoyable motor drive through lovely country from Washington. The view from Oakwood over the Blue Ridge Mountains and the Piedmont Valley is unsurpassed.

MRS. George P. Greenhalgh, of Berryville, took her string of show horses to Lynchburg for the Junior League Horse Show, which opened yesterday. Mrs. Billy Jacobs Wetherall accompanied her to ride the horses in the jumping classes, and J. North Fletcher, of Warrenton, and R. L. Woodward, of Suffolk, Va., are judging.

THE hill city of Lynchburg, set like Rome on seven hills, differs from any other city in America. The houses perched in crevices remind one of many seen in the mountains of Switerland. The town is filled with visitors there for the Horse Show, and there is much entertaining for them. The committee in charge includes Mrs. B. C. Baldwin, jr., chairman; Mrs. E. L. Carrington, Miss Harriet Rogers, Mrs. Althea Moseley, Mrs. E. P. Miller, A. D. Barksdale, B. P. Edmunds, Reed E. Graves, Floyd Knight, J. M. B. Lewis and C. E. Bailey.

P.-T.A. to Lose $10,000 Fund If It Moves Offices From Here

The National Congress of Parent and Teachers, which has maintained its headquarters in Washington since it was organized here nearly 50 years ago, will lose a trust fund of more than $10,000 if the headquarters are moved to Chicago in accordance with the action of the board of managers yesterday.

The board, at its session in Cincinnati preliminary to the opening of the convention of the national congress there Monday, passed a resolution providing for the transfer of the headquarters according to word received here last night. The trust fund, established about 20 years ago, is earmarked for a headquarters building for the national congress in Washington, with the provision that the money shall go to George Washington University for a parent-teacher chair, in case it is not used by the organization. The fund represents the proceeds of the sale of property bought for a headquarters in 1917, used as a service club during the war and sold after it, because, at that time, the structure was too large for the offices of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers.

Vigorous protests were entered by the District representatives at the meeting of the board of managers yesterday, back by those from Delaware, Maryland and other States. Local delegates, who are leaving for the convention this morning, were of the opinion the action of the board would bring the matter to the convention floor for final decision.

The initial objection of the District Congress of Parents and Teachers to the proposed removal of the headquarters to Chicago was not primarily on the grounds that they should remain here, but that the effort early this year to transfer them on the order of the executive committee was not in accordance with the by-laws of the congress. The District delegates are now prepared to present to the convention arguments for retaining the offices in the National Capital—one of them that the intention of the pioneers that they be permanently located here is indicated in the establishment of the headquarters building fund, which the congress will lose if they are moved.

Mrs. Walter B. Fry, the District president, is already in Cincinnati, and other delegates follow today.

Dulles Says Powers Must Be Satisfied

International Law Session Weighs Steps to Attaining World Security

Collective security for world peace is possibly only if the great powers are "reasonably" satisfied in their desires, the armament race is ended and order re-established in commercial relations, Allen W. Dulles, New York attorney, told the American Society of International Law at its thirty-third annual meeting yesterday at the Carlton Hotel.

"If these conditions could be realized," Dulles said, "I believe that we should again endeavor to establish a Council of Nations where all issues relating to world peace could be considered."

Dulles warned that if there will always be powerful nations "whose appetites are insatiable, the attempt to establish a collective system will prove ineffective."

Alien Rights Discussed

In any collective security system, Dulles declared, the United States cannot be expected to guarantee use of its armed force to keep European peace. Futhermore, "sporadic interventions on our part" are not likely to bring peace, he asserted. He pointed to the fact that, although this country intervened on the side of the Allies, its subsequent withdrawal left the victors unable to keep control and the situation reverted to the previous levels of power.

Prof. Edwin Borchard, of the Yale Law Scyhool, speaking at yesterday's early sessions, discussed the controversy around two conceptions of the rights of aliens, the conception of "equality" and the conception of the "international minimum."

Mexico, he pointed out, asserted the principle of "equality between nationals and foreigners" when it refused to pay for land seized from American citizens.

Dr. Carrel Speaks Tonight

Dr. Borchard contended that the theory of equality between nationals and aliens was incompatible with international law.

"While states naturally desire a free hand in dealing with all their inhabitants," he said, "and while it is probably embarrassing to be restrained by treaty or international law in perpetrating excesses, this is one of the conditions of international intercourse."

At the annual banquet at 7:30 p. m. today at the Carlton, Dr. Alexis Carrel, physiologist and author; Senator Key Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, and William Hard, writer, will speak.

Physicists to Talk On Isolation of Carbon Isotopes

Methods of obtaining carbon isotopes, heavy carbon atoms that can be made radioactive and sent through the human body to report on what happens inside, will be discussed at this morning's meeting of the American Physical Society at the Catholic University.

They were touched upon in an interview yesterday by Dr. Harold Clayton Urey, of Columbia University, and Dr. W. H. Furry, of Harvard. Dr. Urey was awarded the Nobel prize in chemistry in 1934 for his isolation of a hydrogen isotope.

Importance of isolating the heavy carbon was ascribed by Dr. Furry to the fact that carbon is a cornerstone of so many substances taken into the body that there is virtually no limit to the biological discoveries that can be made by combining heavy carbon with other elements. Because it can be made radioactive, it is possible to trace its progress and effect by means of apparatus outside the body.

Small-Loan Law Hearings Set Wednesday

Trade Practice Act To Be Studied at 10:30 A. M. Tuesday

Hearings on the Nichols small loan bill for the District have been scheduled for 10:30 a. m. Wednesday, it was announced yesterday afternoon by Representative McGehee (Democrat), of Mississippi, chairman of the House Judiciary sub-committee in charge.

The schedule was set after Representative Allen (Republican), of Illinois, said he would withdraw a somewhat similar measure in favor of the Nichols proposal—providing the interest rate provision was lowered from 2¼ per cent to 2 per cent and the definition of a "small loan" was upped from $300 to a $400 top.

Trade Practice Hearing

Representative McGehee also announced following an executive meeting of his committee that hearings on the trade practice act for the District will be continued at 10:30 a. m. Tuesday.

"When hearings on fair trade, small loans and the bill on unemployment compensations are out of the way everything else will have to take their chances," he said.

Two bills were reported favorably by the sub-committee and placed on the calendar of the full District Committee, 18 were pigeonholed and 6 were marked for hearing—if there is time and interest.

Credit Union Bill Approved

Under provisions of one favorably reported bill, jurisdiction over District credit unions would be transferred from the Commissioners and Comptroller of Currency to the Farm Credit Administration. The other would widen the power of the Commissioners in regard to condemnation proceedings for street projects.

Bills approved for hearings included the gun-sale proposal and an act "for the establishment of a probation system in the District," both by Representative Schulte.

Capital News In Brief

Streit on World Union

A federal union of the 15 "oldest democracies" was proposed here last night as "a way out" by Clarence K. Streit, former Geneva correspondent for the New York Times, and author of the book, "Union Now."

The union would be based on the federal system as practiced in the United States and would include these features: A union of citizenship, a united defense force, a customs-free economy, a general currency and a unified postal and communications system.

According to Streit, the union would be designed "to provide effective common government in our democratic world in those fields where such common government will clearly serve man's freedom better than separate governments."

ers sat near large baskets of apples on the float.

The queen's 30 college-girl princesses in pink dresses, picture hats and wraps followed on a float of white built in tiers.

Behind the royal floats marched 25 American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars Drum and Bugle Corps in bright full-dress uniforms.

Four other divisions included numerous bands, gayly decorated floats in rainbow colors, military school students in regulation gray and a large section from high and graded schools of Frederick County.

The clouds that hung like nightmares over the apple city throughout the day failed to unloose rain and the parade, beginning at 2 p. m., dissolved at the end of Main street in what seemed an explosion of bright pantaloons, shakos, floats, dripping blossoms, visiting firemen, school children in parade costumes, apple princesses, a phantasmagoria in riot.

The thousands who had marched then clogged into the thoroughfares where the record-breaking crowds were assembled. A man scarcely had room to squeeze through with his bottle.

Officials Jubilant

The festival officials, harassed by rain and the threats of it on Thursday, the opening day, grew jubilant and said that every road—even the old paths Stonewall Jackson once used—had brought the crowds in.

"There will be a bigger and even better Apple Blossom Festival next year," it was said from the headquarters, whose next project is to speed the departing guests home in the best repair possible.

The parade started on time, with the Handley High School Band in the van. Before it rode Dr. Lewis I. Allen, of Winchester, the marshal, and behind it came the queen, Vice President Garner's now famous grandchild, Miss Genevieve Garner, Queen Shenandoah XVI.

She had been such a poised, dark-eyed and likable girl when the crown was given her Thursday by the Virginia Governor. The crowd which doesn't see an apple blossom queen often (they are pretty well sheltered) let out a big whoop in her honor.

They say over here she has been one of the best sovereigns ever and will go down in the Apple Blossom history as Good Queen Genevieve.

From 5 States and D. C.

The parade she witnessed was a whopper. Firemen and war veterans, school children and bands from Washington, Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, passed before her and among them were two distinguished horses, Jeff and Kidron, Pershing's war mounts, and the mayors of Richmond and Pittsburgh.

There was some whooping and hollering from the sidelines, but little or no disorder, no faintings or throwing of bed ticks from hotel windows. The festival officials said it was an ending splashed with glory and coming with some little surprise, considering the weather that came after the festival date was arranged to suit the convenience of an orchestra.

One of the bright spots was the children's part in the parade and their marshals, who rode ponies.

Winchester seemed wideawake enough at 2 p. m., when the parade began. This was remarkable because thousands had danced until 5 a. m. today, and others, participating in all the series of parties that held over until early hours, might have been tired.

Life Begins at 70

Mrs. Bettie Jane Gilbert Is 95 And Washington's Scarlett

Born in N. Carolina Not Far From Birthplace Of Miss Mitchell's Heroine, Was on the Scene During the Civil War, Reconstruction Days

(This series is about men and women 70 or older who are finding so-called "old age" is really a lot of fun. They still are producing and getting a big thrill out of their work or hobbies.—Editor's note.)

By Gerald G. Gross.

Even her name is youthful sounding—Bettie Jane Gilbert.

According to one who has read "Gone With the Wind," Scarlett would be about the same age—95—as Mrs. Gilbert if she were living today and chances are they would have many things in common with each other.

Washington's Scarlett was born in western North Carolina, a few hundred miles north and west of Miss Mitchell's heroine, witnessed the departure for war of her family's menfolk and was on the scene during those trying Reconstruction days. There was tragedy in her life, too, her husband dying suddenly 15 months after their marriage and leaving her with an infant daughter.

Seventy-odd years later Mrs. Gilbert and the daughter are living at 1538 A street northeast, with the former finding that the life of a nonagenarian is not dismal or draggy but gay and changing. She is modest, having to be prompted to tell about her crocheting, quilting, fondness for travel and the regular correspondence she conducts with a favorite nephew back home in Lenoir, N. C.

"Thirteen has been my lucky number," says Mrs. Gilbert. "I was born on November 13, 1843, and my mother and only sister were also born on the thirteenth. Mother lived to 98 and a cousin insisted upon coming back to his birthplace in Lenoir all the way from his home in Texas to celebrate his 101st birthday anniversary."

About once a year Mrs. Gilbert herself makes a pilgrimage by train to her old home, often traveling alone.

She helps her daughter, Mrs. Robert H. Harstin, keep the house tidy which, with her needlework and letter writing and visits to her two great-great grandchildren, makes Mrs. Gilbert anything but an idle person. But for a siege of pneumonia three years ago she is sure she would be even more active today.

Her formula for pleasant longevity?

"Well, I believe in being contented with my lot, never grumbling, eating what's set before me and asking no questions."

3 Records Smashed at Penn Relays in Rain

SPORTS The Washington Post SPORTS

18 WASHINGTON: SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1939 ★★★★

Terp Second In 400-Meter Hurdle Event

Georgetown Fails; Discus, Shot, Prep School Quarter-Mile Relay Marks Fall

By Jack Munhall.
A Staff Correspondent.

Philadelphia, April 28.—Rain and records fell in copious quantity here today as the forty-fifth annual Penn Relay Carnival opened in the cavernous confines of Franklin Field, before a slight handful of 5,000 heavily-clad fans.

William Faymonville, of Notre Dame, smashed his own discus mark with a heave of 163 feet 4 inches; Frank Ryan, of Columbia, finally succeded in defeating his nemisis, William Watson, of Michigan, with a record shot put toss of 50 feet 9 inches, and Mecersburg created a new all-time prep school quarter-mile relay standard.

Other outstanding features of the day were the surprising second place in the 400-meter hurdles by Maryland's Hermie Evans, and the repeat triumps of Pittsburgh in the sprint medley and North Texas Teachers in the distance medley.

Maryland Fourth

North Texas, with the indomitable Rideout twins, Blaine and Wayne, uncorking superlative performances, scored by about one hundred yards over Indiana. The University of Maryland was a surprising fourth, defeating such teams as New York U. and Pittsburgh.

Georgetown, only other Washington team to see action of this opening day's program, failed to threaten in the sprint medley. The Hoyas, placed disadvantageously, got off badly and were never able to make up the ground as Pitt, New York University and Fordham quickly made a three-team race of it.

Maryland ran very well in the distance medley but weakened in the three-quarters and mile laps to fall from second to fifth before it snapped back to finish behind Michigan which trailed Indiana by only a couple of feet.

Releases "Kick" Too Soon

Mason Chronister, running the fourth leg of the event which calls for the first man to run 440 and the second and third 220, appeared to release his "kick" too soon and was unable to match the finishing power of his Indian and Michigan rivals.

Alan Miller, No. 1 man, and Gene Ochenreiter and Jim Kehoe who followed in that order for the Terps all gave their best, but it wasn't quite good enough against the strongest opposition this country can muster.

The irrepressible Rideout twins who last year paced North Texas to a new American record in the distance medley were not pressed in scoring their lop-sided triumph. The race was close between North Texas and Indiana until the second Lone Star runner handed the baton to Blanie, who ran the third leg, or the three-quarters. From then on it was like Wa Admiral running a field of dray horses into the ground.

Lead Increased

Blaine quickly opened up daylight between his flying heels and the remainder of the field, and this lead was increased almost every stride by brother Wayne.

Faymonville, husky Notre Dame weight star, bettered his hammer mark established in last year's carnival by 6 feet 2½ inches. His winning throw was more than a foot better than the 152 feet 2 inches credited to the urnner-up, Watson, of Michigan.

Ryan, in establishing the new shot-put mark, which wiped out his last year's record heave of 51 feet 6¾ inch, scored his first victory this year against his rival. Watson, whose best was 50 feet 10¾ inches.

C. U., Eagles Vie Today

Catholic University, American University and Eastern High School, the Capital City's other three entries in the carnival, make their first appearance tomorrow afternoon. The Cardinals and Eagles will compete in the Mason-Dixon Conference 1-mile relay championship, and the Lincoln Park lads in the 1-mile high school relay.

Georgetown and Maryland both have a chance to crash through with victories on the final day's program. The Hoyas will run in the college 1-mile relay championship of America together with the defending titleholder, Pitt and other powerful quartets, and Maryland, in the 4-mile and Class B mile relays.

Indiana is the defending champion in the latter event and is seeking its third straight triumph.

Record Shattered

Despite the drizzle and a somewhat slippery but not slow track the carnival was to a brilliant start when Mercersburg Military Academy, in the first event on the program shattered all existing records in winning the preparatory quarter mile relay championship of America.

Indians Lose Slugging Bee To Browns, 9-8

Berardino, St. Louis Newcomer, Drives Home Five Runs

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, April 28.—St. Louis and Cleveland put on a 26-hit slugging match today before the invading Browns finally won a 9-to-8 decision to sweep the two-game series.

John Bernardino, St. Louis newcomer, at second base ,continued his exception batting by driving out two doubles and a single to bring home five runs. For the Indians, Hal Trosky, mainly through his two-run fifth-inning homer, drove home four.

St. Louis paraded Fred Johnson, Ewald Pyle and Bill Trotter to the slab before finding that only the latter could check the Indians, who had to send Bill Zuber, Tom Drake, Johnny Humphries and finally Al Milnar to face the Browns.

Trotter stayed out of trouble until the ninth, when the Browns were leading, 9 to 7. Julius Solters singled, Ben Chapman running for him. Jeff Heath singled, but Trosky failed this time atnd hit into a double play. Ken Keltner singled to score Chapman and Frankie Pytlak popped out to end the slam-bang contest.

Myril Hoag and Mel Mazzera, Brownie outfielders, and Berardino all collected there hits in four official trips to the plate.

George Abrams Wins Decision

New York, April 28 (INS).—Harry Balsamo, erstwhile Harlem "brakeman," was derailed tonight. The hard-belting Italian middleweight ran into an avalanche in Georgie Abrams and suffered a serious setback at the hands of the Washington, D. C., boy in their eight-round setto in the Hippodrome.

The result was another serious shock to the "wise money," who for some unexplainable reason installed Balsamo a 3-to-1 favorite, and considerable cash changed hands on the outcome, with Harry's Harlem cohorts going into hock for all they owned on their idol.

Abrams won seven of the eight rounds and gave the Italian a thorough going over. He had Harry a mess at the finish, bleeding from cuts over and under both eyes, the mouth and the nose.

Johnstown, El Chico Meet at Jamaica

Four of Nine Entries in Wood Memorial Handicap Today Eligible for Both Pimlico's Preakness and Kentucky Derby

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 28.—The Wood Memorial mile-and-70 yards figures to get back in good standing in the Kentucky Derby "Crystal Ball" Association tomorrow at Jamaica, with the long-awaited duel between El Chico and Johnstown.

Not since Twenty Grand came home in both the Wood and the Derby back in '31 has this $20,000 stake sent its winner to victory at the Downs.

But, with the fourteenth renewal, in which four of the nine entries are eligibles for both the Derby and the Preakness, and four others are nominees for either one or the other, the situation should change. Of course, Johnstown's speed and Chico's gameness, along with the class packed by Impound and T. M. Dorsett, may mean nothing at all when they start at the Downs or at Pimlico, but it's going to take a lot of running to get past them.

Volitant Also Entered

Then, too, there's Volitant, the Saratoga Stable's hopeful which will go in the Preakness but not the Derby, and which also is a pretty fair stepper. Other Derby eligibles are Mrs. J. D. Hertz's Book Plate and E. W. Duffy's Chief Onaway. George D. Widener's Eight-Thirty, like Volitant, is only a Preakness nominee, while Mrs. F. A. Clark's Lovely Night, although in neither, may have something to say about the Wood if it comes up mud.

The past performances of Johnstown and Chico already have made them outstanding Derby choices, with only Challedon and Technician ranked alongside.

On the strength of his two sparkling 1939 races, the latest a new Jamaica track record of 1:40 3-5 for the mile-and-70, the long-striding Johnstown is likely favorite tomorrow. Chico has had only one 3-year-old out, dropping a nose decision to Wheatley Stable's Gilded Knight at 6 furlongs, but most observers hold that was no test, since he was being aimed at the full mile that day rather than the three-quarters. He has turned in several fast workouts since then.

Gilded Knight Shuns Event

Gilded Knight went on to take Impound and Challedon in the Chesapeake. Trainer Sunny Jim Fitzsimmons elected not to enter him, tomorrow, relying solely on Johnstown. Sunny Jim, incidentally, likes the Wood—he has saddled the winner for the last three years.

Impound's last trip to the post saw the Vanderbilt Derby nominee chase the Knight home in the Chesapeake. The only 3-year-old start for Joe W. Brown's T. M. Dorsett was a 6-furlong handicap win a week ago. Eight-Thirty, which ran out of the money only once in seven 2-year-old starts, still is a question mark.

Three Scratches Are Announced for Maryland Hunt Cup Competition

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, April 28.—Three official scratches in the Maryland Hunt Cup race tomorrow were announced today, but J. Reiman McIntosh, secretary of the Hunt Cup Association, said he expects only 7 of the 15 horses entered to start.

The scratches were Easy Mark, owned by Gerald B. Webb, jr.; Daniel H. Stangster's Cornwall II, and W. M. Hampson's King Ladislaus. None was a favorite and only King Ladislaus has won a race this year. He took the John Rush Streett Memorial, but ran out in the Maryland Grand National last week.

Two days of rain threatened heavy going for the 4-mile course on the estate of J. W. Y. Martin. McIntosh said he did not know definitely what other horses would be scratched.

For the first time in the 45-year history of the race, spectators will have to pay this year. While the association itself is not charging anything, owners of neighboring estates decided to charge $1 or $2 for parking privileges, which have been free in the past. There will be no free-parking within more than a mile of the course.

The wet weather will bear particularly on Blockade, one of the most brilliant timber veterans in Maryland steeplechasing.

Cincinnati Gains First Place in Loop; Eight Hurlers Parade To Hill During Game

By the Associated Press.

Cincinnati, April 28.—Ival Goodman's big bat lifted the Cincinnati Reds into first place in the National League today with a home run which scored two ahead of him in the last of the ninth to beat the Chicago Cubs, 7 to 6.

The game started out as a pitching duel between Johnny (Double No Hit) Vander Meer, of the Reds, and Vlay Bryant, of the Cubs, but developed into a slugging battle after Hank Leiber homered in the fourth to send the Cubs in front.

Parade of Pitchers

Vander Meer was followed by four other pitchers and Brayant by two.

The home-run ball to Goodman was big Bill Lee's first and only pitch after relieving Jack Russell, when Bill Weber and Lonnie Frey led off with singles in the ninth. As a result he was charged with his first loss of the season.

The Cubs were never behnid until beaten. They sent Vander Meer to the showers in the fifth when Billy Herman's triple to right scored two and Jim Gleeson's single scored Herman. They scored two more in the seventh off Ray (Peaches) Davis as Herman was hit by a pitched ball and Gleeson walked and both raced home on Joe Marty's single to center.

Rookie Stars

In the meantime the Reds kept in the running with two scores in the fifth and two more in the seventh. To get the first pair Wally Berger walked, Billy Myers singled, both advanced on an infield out and scored on Frey's single to right.

Rookie Tony Bongiovanni, one of three pinch hitters used by the Reds, doubled ni the seventh to score Myers, who had doubled, and this signalled the exodus of Bryant. However, Goodman singled Bongiovanni home.

The victory gave the Reds a sweep of the two-game series and it was Goodman's work which figured prominently ni yesterday's victory, too. He hmoered wtih one on and tripled with the bases loaded besides getti nga single in the first game.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Johnny Stone has rounded third and is headed home in his struggle with the dread germ. Saranac is behind him and he's moving on to Asheville, with the rest of the race being downhill.

Johnny's a cinch to score, his doctors say. "Best patient we ever had at Saranac," they told Clark Griffith recently. "Remarkable recuperative powers and he'll beat this lung infection 100 per cent." And to see Johnny Stone yesterday was to believe them. That overworked descriptive, "picture of health," belongs to him. There was a bloom in his cheeks and he was bigger. The 172-pounder they rushed to Saranac on sudden notice last June, returned to Washington yesterday with 199 pounds on his frame.

POVICH

Johnny'll score in his fight for health, as we were saying, but he's gone to bat for the last time in the big leagues. He won't play any more baseball. He admitted that. "It's been a long, hard pull," Johnny said. "It isn't over yet, but the end's in sight. When I get up to 100 per cent again, I'm staying there. No more baseball."

The later chapters in the saga of Johnny Stone, star college athlete, brilliant big league ball player, clean liver, can be actually frightening. If Johnny Stone, big, strong, and an outdoors man, were supposed to be immune from the dread infection, then how about you and I? Where the germ may strike apparently is unpredictable. Baseball and its fans were actually startled when it struck down Johnny Stone.

Won a Place Among Outstanding Athletes

At the end of the 1937 season, Stone had taken his place as one of the bright stars of the big leagues. He had batted .330 and at last, apparently was reaching his peak. There never had been any doubt about the fellow's possibilities. He was, simply, a swell ball fellow. His batting stroke was truly stylish. On the bases he could fly. His throwing arm was something to see for the fans and something to be dreaded by ambitious baserunners.

He was, undoubtedly, one of the handsomest men in the big leagues. Handsome in body as well as face. If a human can have the legs of a thoroughbred, Stoney had them—stout but shapely calves, nicely-tapering ankles. He was 6 feet, broad but not too broad of chest, and thin of waist. This department remembers one story of Johnny Stone, in particular.

We were walking onto the field at the Polo Grounds on a December day in 1936. George Marshall's Redskins, then a Boston team, was in pre-game practice for the battle with the New York Giants. Nearby was standing Cliff Battles, Redskin backfield ace, idly punting the ball down field. Battles, in his football togs and helmet was a picture of a remarkable physique.

Stone and Battles Two Fine Specimens

"A fine-looking specimen, this Battles," observed Marshall.

We agreed.

"Id like to breed him," smiled Marshall. "You know, like the horse people do. I'd like to have about three halfbacks like Battles—or better still three built like Johnny Stone. What a backfield that would be."

There wasn't much warning when they rushed Johnny Stone to Saranac that day last June after Detroit doctors had diagnosed his case. Washington club officials, and Stone himself, never imagined that he was vulnerable to the tubercular germ.

Why, only a few days before, in Washington, Stoney had given a remarkable exhibition, quite beyond the talents of a sick man. He was batting against Mel Harder, of the Indians. A foul tip off his own bat struck him on the instep, injuring his foot painfully. They started to take him out of the game, but he limped back to the box. On the next pitch he hit a line drive to centerfield and scurried around the bases with his faultless running form to beat it out for an inside-the-park home run.

He Was Not Loafing—He Was Giving His All

He didn't look like a sick man on that play, but he had been a sick man for many, many weeks. Bucky Harris and other club officials were slow to realize it, and there was excuse for them. They were not alarmed when Stoney, in a one-sided game, didn't give chase to a base hit with all the speed he could muster. Sometimes Johnny loafed out there in the field, it seemed. But Harris, as we were saying, was not alarmed. He always did think that Johnny "had a little of that Tennessee hookworm in him." It was Harris' way of saying that Southern boys act a bit lazy when it doesn't matter much.

But Johnny wasn't loafing out there, however much it may have seemed that he did. To the day when they put him on that Saranac train, he had been giving up to the hilt, but what he had to give in those last weeks wasn't much. He was giving from a body that was tired, pain-wracked and unresponding. To restore it, Stoney was told, would be a long, hard pull. And for the past year, Johnny has been in there swinging—at something he couldn't see, yet hitting it on the nose. He led that Saranac league.

Softball League Opens Tomorrow

B'nai B'rith Fraternal Softball League will open tomorrow on the Rock Creek Softball diamonds, with eight hard-hitting clubs slated to see action on the first day. The first contest at 10 a. m. will bring together Cairo and Cascade teams, and in order after that will be clashes between B'nai B'rith and Tsars, Wilson Reserves and Sigma Phi, and Progress Club and Wilson.

Gus Mancuso's Brother Purchased by Giants

Mancuso, who is 22, has been Giants' property for the past three years, formerly playing with their farm at Greenwood, Miss. His brother, also a catcher, was with the Giants for several years until his trade to the Cubs last winter.

Famous War Horses March Again at Festival

Stepping out of retirement for a day, the two war mounts of Gen. John J. Pershing, Jeff (left) and Kidron, a French thoroughbred, yesterday lent the dignity of their presence to the Apple Blossom parade at Winchester, Va. Stepping high to martial music of brass bands, the two veterans made their first appearance since post war days. Neither wore a saddle but were led by grooms. Kidron was used by Pershing when he led the Bastille Day parade down the Champs d'Elysee after the armistice, and Jeff went overseas and returned with the general. Both have been living lives of ease at the Front Royal remount depot

Krakauskas Faces Gomez and Yanks Today

Nats Start West After N. Y. Series

Harris Confident Stocky Left-Hander Will Beat New York; Lewis on Bench

By Shirley Povich

Krakauskas vs. Gomez, the pitching program that was disastrous to the Nats in their Griffith Stadium inaugural last week, is re-scheduled for this afternoon with Yankee Stadium as the new locale.

As the Nats entrained for New York last night, preliminary to their first swing around the West, Manager Bucky Harris reaffirmed his faith in the stocky left-hander whose failure blighted the hopes of 30,000 opening-day fans.

"I'm not quitting on him," said Harris. "He showed me too much speed on the ball in the South, and he had control, too. Krakky'll be in there in our opener at Yankee Stadium."

Gomez to Start

That it will be Gomez for the Yankees is fairly certain. The Yankee left-hander is always started against the Nats, and following yesterday's washout at Boston, he has had ample rest. It will be Gomez's second start of the season. His first was a 6-3 victory over Washington.

Triumphant in two of their last three games, the Nats embark on their first extended road trip in a hitting mood. They have averaged 13 hits and seven runs in their last three games.

If the left-handed Krakauskas has any marked degree of success against the Yankees today, then Harris tomorrow will start Southpaw Ken Chase in the finale of the two-game series. Chase, like Krakaukas, was a disappointment in his first start, but Harris still retains faith in his pair of southpaws.

Aganist Gomez, Harris will not disturb his right-handed batting lineup. Buddy Lewis, ready to play, will remain on the bench with Charley Gelbert handlnig the third-base job in view of his consistent hitting since the start of the season. Ossie Bluege will suppiant Jimmy Wasdell at first base, and Harris will attempt to add punch to his outfield by substituting Bobby Estalella for the left-handed Sammy West in left field.

Following the brief Yankee series, the Nats will entertain for the West tomorrow night, opening a three-game series at St. Louis on Tuesday. Thence they move to Chicago for two games, to Cleveland for three and Detroit for two.

Notes of the Nats

Walter Masterson, an arrival from Charlotte yesterday, is accompanying the club on its current trip and may be seen in relief roles in the West . . . Roberto Ortiz, consigned to Charlotte, is happy at the change . . . he will not attempt to play the outfield unless he fails as a pitcher . . . the Charlotte club plans to pitch him at Richmond on Monday night . . . Washington will play its first game of night ball at Philadelphia on July 6 . . . Jimmy Bloodworth faces release to Springfield on option of recall within 24 hours . . . the Nats have reached the player limit of 25 despite the fact that the deadline is May 15 . . . any deal the Washington club makes in the near future will not involve a major league player, but a likely looking minor leaguer . . . the fellow who is apt ti be playing first base for the Nats against lefthanded pitching is Charley Gelbert . . . Gelbert credits his startling comeback to the ministrations of Trainer Mike Martin, who has broken up adhesions in his wounded left foot, giving him freer use of the limb.

By the Associated Press.

Des Moines, Iowa, April 28.—Gregory Rice, Barrel-chested Notre Dame, runner paraded to a recordsmashing victory in the 2-mile race opening the thirtieth renewal of the Drake relay carnival today without opposition from his Midwest rival, Walter Mehl, of Wisconsin, national collegiate champion.

Mehl didn't keep his date with Rice, rated as one of the Nation's outstanding distance runners, to carry on their duel that had its inception when the bespectacled Badger conquered Rice by inches in the National Collegiate championships a year ago.

Running without the challenge of a rival clinging to his heels, Rice whizzed across the finish line 50 yards ahead of Gilbert Dodds, of Ashland College, Ashland, Ohio, in 9:10, to clip six-enths of a second off the Drake raceord hung up by Don Lash, of Indiana, three years ago.

3 Records Set

Rice's achievement was one of three record-breaking performances before a crowd of 7,000 that turned out for the opening of the two-day carnival, which attracted a field of 2,000 athletes from Minnesota to Texas and from California to Ohio.

Edsel Wibbels, of Nebraska, blotted out the meet record in the discus throw by tossing the platter 158.29 feet to eclipse the mark of 158 feet 3 inches established by Thomas Lark of the United States Military Academy ten years ago.

The crack sprint medley team of Rice Institute, Houston, Tex., made up of Purney, Jones, Moser and Bell, lowered the meet record for the event by covering the distances of 440, 220, 220 and 880 yards in 3:25.1, knocking two-tenths of a second off the record hung up by another quartet of runners from the same school a year ago.

With tow-headed Freddie Wolcott, regarded as the Nation's premier hurdler, running as anchor man, another Rice relay team equalled the meet record in the preliminaries of the 440-yard relay, covering the distance in 0:41.5. Wolcott led the qualifiers for the 120-yard high hurdle finals by winning his heat in 0:14.5.

Mehl, instead of racing Rice in the 2-mile, saved himself for the university distance medley race, in which he was defeated by 8 yards by John Munski, running as anchor man for the victorious University of Missouri team. Munski caught Mehl on the second lap and ran doggedly ahead, covering the mile in 4:15.

The Brighter Side . . .

By Damon Runyon

Our old man used to say that it was truly remarkable how willing people were to listen to accusations, and how unwilling they were to hear explanations thereof from the accused.

RUNYON

He said that in the course of a long life, he had been accused of many things, most of them to his discredit, and that it had been his observation that everybody always knew all about the accusations down to the last detail, but that few ever knew his answers to same, or cared to hear them.

He said he had once been accused by a bitter enemy of stealing a dog, when the dog had merely followed him home and sat outside his door yowling for admittance. The dog knew that pork chops were brewing inside. Our old man said that everybody who knew him must have known that he would not steal a dog, or that if he did steal one it would certainly have been a better dog than the one he was accused of stealing.

He said the fellow who owned the dog went all over town telling about the alleged theft and everybody listened intently, but when our old man came along with his explanation of the dog follow-

Celtics Nine Gets Semi-Pro Franchise

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Alexandria, Va., April 28.—Alexandria will be represented in organized semipro baseball this season for the first time in 20 years, it was learned today, with the announcement that the St. Mary's Celtics have been granted a franchise in the strong Tri-County League, composed of leading independent nines from Arlington, Fairfax and Loudoun counties. The locals will replace the Leesburg nine, which withdrew after several years of competition in the Tri-County loop.

Although they have been yearly candidates for the State semipro championship and have performed in a number of championship tournaments, the Celtics have never before been affiliated with an organized league. Officials of the club decided to join up with the Northern Virginia circuit in an effort to increase interest in the team here, believing that league competition will help offset the notable attendance decrease of the past two seasons.

The Celtics inaugurate their league season here on Sunday afternoon, when they engage the Furnace Mountain nine at the Municipal Stadium at 2:30.

April 30, Purcellville at Vienna; Herndon at Ballston; Furnace Mountain at Alexandria.

Washington College Plays Terrapins Today

Though much of Maryland University's athletic interest will be with its thin-clads in the Penn Relays this week-end, other Terrapin sports will not sag because of it. The baseball team, for one, will have its hands full when it travels to St. Chestertown, Md., today for a game with Washington College nine. So that the Terp star, Earl Springer, may be saved for Maryland's game with Duke University Monday, Pershing Mondorff will undertake today's mound work.

Varsity tennis and lacrosse teams of the College Park institution will be busy on the home fields, as will the Frosh baseball team. The latter plays host to Hagerstown High, while the netmen face Virginia Poly and the stickmen tangle clubs with Princeton. The tennis matches start at 2 p. m., and the lacrosse game one hour later.

In the semifinal singles, Riggs took the first two sets from Doeg handily 6—3, 6—2, but Doeg extended him to the twenty-sixth game in the third set. The final set lasted more than an haur before Riggs won 14 to 12.

In the other half of the semifinals, Sabin moved up with a five-set victory over Cooke, 4—6, 2—6, 7—5, 6—0, 6—3. Cooke had a two-set lead over Sabin and was leading, 5 to 4, in the third set when Sabin turned the tide. The match lasted for three hours in cloudy, chill weather.

Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan will meet Miss Florence Leboutillier in the women's singles finals tomorrow. Mrs. Fabyan eliminated Miss Margot Iess, 6—1, 6—2, and Miss Leboutillier defeated Miss Barbara Nields, 6—3, 6—3.

At 11 a. m. tomorrow Mrs. Fabyan and Miss Eliza Coxe will meet Mrs. Peter Belin and Miss Allison Harrison in the finals of the women's doubles. The mixed doubles semifinals will be played at 4 p. m. tomorrow, and the remaining matches of the tournament probably Sunday.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, April 28.—Don Budge's next opponent, now that he has knocked the be-stuffings out of Ellsworth Vines and Fred Perry, will be none other than dear old Bill Tilden. Their meeting will correspond roughly to a match between Joe Louis and Jim Jeffries, for Tilden won the first of his many national and international titles in 1915, the year Don was born. Willie is pressing 50.

CONSIDINE

Budge will leave here shortly for a world-wide tour that will not end until next February. He will open first in London, with Tilden, Vines and Hans Nusslein, the German professional star. Perry would have been a logical and gate-drawing foe in England, but the brilliant British player—who has to pay income taxes not only to Uncle Sam but to John Bull—is at odds with British tax officials at the moment and must forego the trip.

Nusslein will drop out after the English tour, and will be replaced by Les Stoefen, the 6-foot, 6-inch California Apollo who for a time considered giving up his body to boxing. A pop on his classic nose changed the young man's mind. From England the boys will go through the troubled Balkans, Egypt, India, China and Japan. No contract will be offered to Baron Gottfried von Cramm, who is knocking around in Egypt at the moment. Budge expects the tour will zoom his income to more than $100,000 for his first year in pro tennis.

Tilden has been living in London for months, writing a book. The fortune he made out of professional tennis—it has been estimated as high as half a million dollars—is reportedly gone. So the bruising tour on which he will soon embark will be his return to work, tough work, 20 years after a normal athlete's prime.

Budge can give him three or four games a set, and still beat him. But though he probably creaks like a flivver's clutch, and runs like a senile Gehrig, Tilden will give a good account of himself. What with his whinnies and glares, his foot-stamping and his brief flashes of the old and long-dulled skill, he'll never bore 'em if he plays until he's 75.

Nova Hopes for a Kayo Victory

Lou Nova was telling us the other day, before he went to camp to train for his fight against Max Baer, that he hopes to knock out Baer with the new left he has perfected. He showed us how it differed from the clumsy roundhouse hook he used in beating Gunnar Barlund and Tommy Farr. He gets much more leverage into the new punch, plus all the weight of his big whirling body.

He's a good-natured intelligent kid, this Nova. "I'll give him a couple of these hooks," he said, bouncing easily around the floor of the pioneer gymnasium. "Then when I've got him going I'll crank my right and . . . While I'm doing all that Baer'll probably hit me on the chin and knock me out," he finished with a laugh.

Nova thinks Baer is the No. 1 heavyweight challenger. "Why not?" he demanded. "The fellow's been up there, hasn't he? And the only fellow who has really beaten him was Louis. Baer's a heluva fighter. I'm not going to run him down. All I'm going to do is knock him out. Listen, when I was in high school I used to scrape together a buck to see that fellow fight bums like Arthur Dekuh, Jack Linkhorn, Les Kennedy and so on. Max wasn't nearly as good an athlete as I was, so I began to figure then and there that I could beat him if we ever met. And I've never gotten over that feeling."

Jeers for Galento Have Prophetic Ring

Pst!—that jeer that San Franciscans gave Tony Galento the other night had a prophetic ring . . . If Publicist Harry Markson can make the country believe in the Louis-Galento thing, Mike Jacobs should take him into the firm . . . The visit of the King and Queen of England is going to seem awful tame after the ship-sinking arrival of Crown Prince Olav and Crown Princess Martha . . . Six big league football players are playing minor league baseball this season. Frank Filchock of the Redskins is an infielder for Beaumont; Joe Carter, Eagle end, is a catcher with Tulsa; Jim Poole, end for the Giants, plays the outfield for Tom Yawkey's Evansville, (Ind.) team; Ed Goddard, Cleveland halfback, has been farmed out to Ogden, Utah, by the Cincinnati Reds; Ace Parker, of the football Dodgers, is with Chattanooga and Gaynell Tinsley, of the Chicago Cardinals, is an infielder for Marshall, of the East Texas League . . . Sammy Baugh, who only a little more than a year was being hailed as the regular third baseman of the Cardinals, isn't playing any baseball this year, thanks partly to a no-baseball clause in his new football contract with G. Preston Marshall, but thanks chiefly to the fact that he can't hit a curve with a bull fiddle.

Maryland Golfers Beat Haverford, 8-1

Maryland University's budding golf squad, winner of five of its seven matches to date, annexed another victory yesterday when it trounced Haverford College by a score of 8 to 1. The tmatch, staged at Indian Spring in a continuous drizzle and despite unseasonable cold, brought the record of the first-year Terps to six victories, one defeat and a deadlock.

The only loss of the day was suffered by Maryland when Bill Bryant faltered on the final few holes and lost to Haverford's Harry Lidaell, 1 down. Bob Harmon and George DeWitt turned in the best scores of the day, 79.

Complete results:

Harmon (Md.) defeated Gross, 4 and 3; Rea (Md.) defeated Steele, 4 and 3. Best ball, Maryland, 2 and 1.

Brownell (Md.) defeated Burnside, 2 and 1; Murphy (Md.) defeated Wilson, 3 and 4. Best ball, Maryland, 1 up.

Bryant (Md.) lost to Lidaell, 1 down; De Witt (Md.) defeated Feptloe, 4 and 3. Best ball, Maryland, 2 up.

Bridgewater Wins Track Meet, 84-52

Harrisonburg, Va., April 28 (AP).—Bridgewater College trackmen romped to an easy 84-to-52 victory over Lynchburg College here today. The Eagles displayed exceptional strength in the hurdles and middle distance races, and amassed 9 of the 14 first places.

Feature of the meet was the new record of 6 feet 3 inches set by Capt Bob Miller, of Bridgewater, in winning the high jump. Miller and Kemper stood out in the Eagle roster, as most of Lynchburg's points came in the dashes and broad jump.

Bull Lea Doubtful Starter in Philadelphia Handicap Today

Ten Named For $10,000 Feature Race

Burning Star Choice On Muddy Track At Havre de Grace; Many Noted Entries

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace, Md., April 28.—The 3-year-olds with their Kentucky Derby and Preakness doings will be shunted out of the turf picture today, as far as Maryland fans are concerned, while attention is centered on the older stars. A field of ten was named over night for the twenty-seventh running of the historic Philadelphia Handicap. The contest, at a mile and a sixteenth for added money of $10,000, will be the valedictory feature.

Despite the prospect of mud—deep mud—the Philadelphia drew a line-up of high caliber thoroughbreds. Just how many will remain in action if there is no change in track conditions remains to be seen.

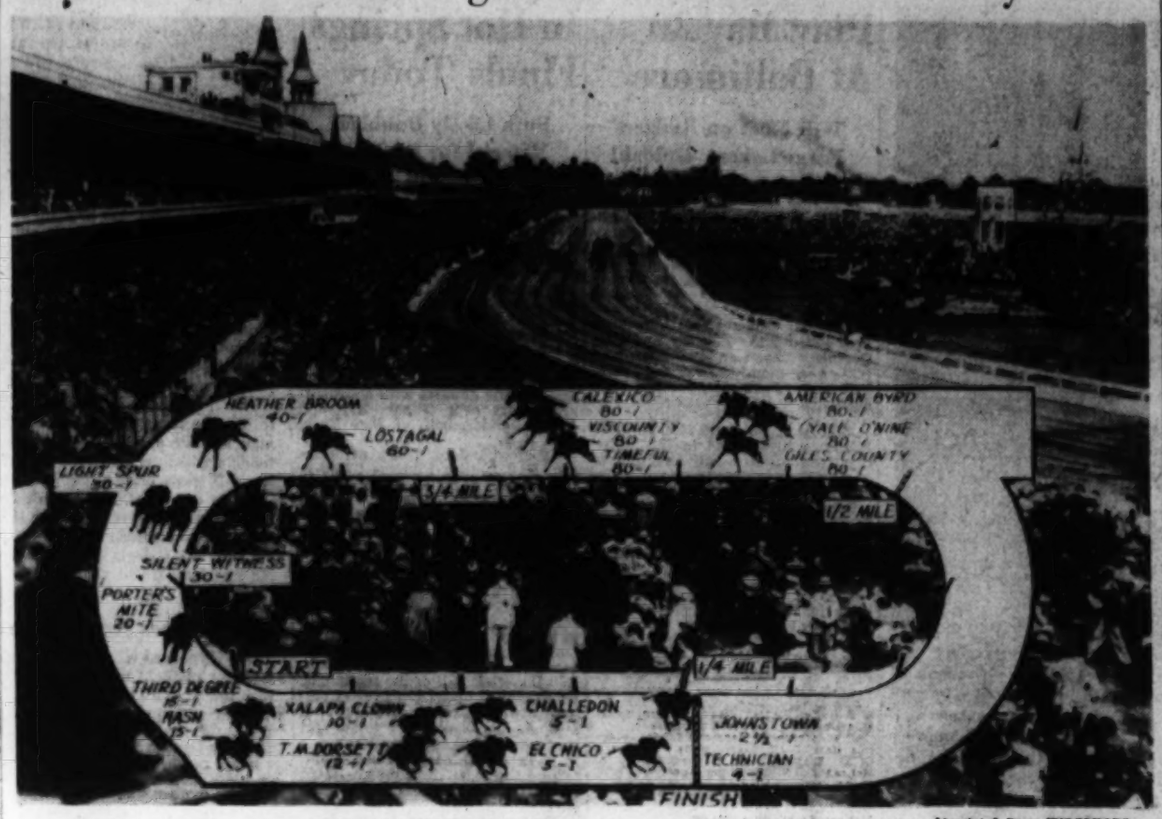
Among the doubtful starters is Calumet Farm's Bull Lea, winner of the $50,000 Widener last winter and the big attraction in the field. Bull Lea has little liking for off tracks and it is believed that he will be scratched if the strip fails to reach at least a "good" rating. On a fair track Bull Lea would be the favorite, despite his assignment of 126 pounds.

However, a thrilling battle is expected for the handicap which numbers among its winners such stars as Equipoise, Pennant, Billy Kelly, Boniface and Sun Beau. Upward of seven of the horses entered probably will face Starter Milton.

On a muddy track, the choice is likely to be the Shandon Farm's Burning Star, winner of the 1938 renewal. Warren Yarberry has ridden Burning Star to two victories this year in his only starts and the boy comes up from Keeneland for this one race.

W. L. Brann, owner of Challedon, will hold a strong hand with Aethelwold and Challephen. Aethelwold showed exceptional off track form in his recent outing here. Maryland hopes also will go with Trainer Guy Bedwell's entry of Hypocrite and Gerald. Isolater. Conquer. Thanksgiving. Bourbon King and Ocean Roll complete the field.

Here It Is, Folks—Betting Commissioners' Own Derby Chart



Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

With Derby wagers pointing to a four-horse finish, here is how the field lines up at this point on the betting commissioners' books. Just to complete the general idea of how the finish will look, last year's trek down the homestretch is presented as a backdrop for the track chart. Figures used are prices quoted by James J. Carroll and Charles Burke, of St. Louis, well-known authorities on turf betting. The smaller figure was used where Carroll and Burke differed on odds. Today's results of the Wood Memorial at Jamaica may mean further revision of the odds

Technician Starts Today At Churchill

Four Other Derby Eligibles Go to Post In Opening Feature

By the Associated Press.

Louisville, Ky., April 28.—Woolford Farm's Technician and four other more lightly regarded Kentucky Derby eligibles meet tomorrow in the 6-furlong $1,000 Daniel Boone Purse on the opening day card at Churchill Downs.

Technician, rated at 4 to 1 to win the Derby next Saturday, was the odds-on favorite to take the measure tomorrow of Light Spur, Giles County, No Competition and Fern Creek, all Derby eligibles. Bugles Blow completes the field, with Giles County and No Competition grouped as an entry.

The feature race on the card inaugurating the 19-day meet at the Downs is the $2,500 added Clark Handicap for 3-year-olds and upward at a mile and a sixteenth. The Clark is as old as the more famous Kentucky Derby, having been first run in 1875. No Derby eligible is entered in the Clark. Torchy, Arabs Arrow and Co-Sport were the overnight favorites.

Chief interest at the Downs today centered on the arrival of W. L. Brann's Challedon and Porter's Mite from the stable of W. E. Boeing. Both horses arrived from Maryland in good shape.

At The Post

Havre de Grace, April 28.

Dear Al:

Rube Marquard, former Giant's hurling star and now a mutuel clerk, has had a world of experience in selling horse tickets to customers. On the early train this morning, he was telling about an "outlaw" meeting in the Middle West a few years ago. He said that on the way to the post for the first race, most of the jockeys were smoking cigarettes and the outrider had a big cigar stuck in the corner of his mouth. At the post the whole field cut up and after 15 minutes the starter finally rang the bell. Rube says two horses ducked into the paddock gate and another jumped the fence. While the horses were running, the crowd marched toward the starter howling. He held up his program and yelled, "Ladies and gentlemen, I did the best I could. I thank you." Rube says that he was the only "seller" in the clubhouse and after the third race, the man who owned the track came over to ask him how many tickets he had sold up to that point. Rube told him that he hadn't sold ticket No. 1, so the owner bought a ticket from him. There was a night meeting once and things had been so tough that the jockeys were beginning to believe they wouldn't be paid off. So they nominated a horse to win and all hands got down on him. When the start came, the horse they bet on wheeled and began running the wrong way of the track. But somebody saved the day. The lights went off and the race was declared out. Marquard said that he never saw more money than was shown by Texas oil men during the racing down there. He said a mutuel clerk gave one of them a tip one day and the oil man gave him an order for a new car to be used if the horse won. The clerk missed getting the machine by a short nose.

Morstep Wins Havre de Grace Feature Race

Leaves Two Derby Eligibles Behind In 6-Furlong Event

By a Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace, Md., April 28.—Morstep, hard-running daughter of Misstep and Mormaw, found the muddy racing strip right up her alley this afternoon. Without surrendering the lead at any stage she ankled over the six furlong course to leave two Kentucky Derby canidates in her wake while supplying her backers with a $7.20 mutuel.

There was a lot of hustling of horses behind her but the finish line found her three-quarters of a length in front of Easy Mon, once a Louisville hope of the Calumet Farm. The A. C. C. Stable's Ace Call was third. Hal Price Headley's Hants, named for the derby, was fourth with Air Win, of half-mile and Charles Town fame, last and far back.

Track Very Muddy

The weather and the track were about the worst of the meeting but the racing was rather formful for the 5,000 hale and hearty customers.

Warren Yarberry rode Morstep. He has been piloting with success in Kentucky and arrived this morning to take the saddle assignment here tomorrow on the Shandon Farm's Burning Star in the $10,000 added Philadelphia Handicap.

The riding star today was Apprentice Vincent Polk. The lad, under contract to H. G. Bedwell, turned in three victories and brought his total of winners to 12, one behind Charlie Stevenson for top honors at the session which ends tomorrow.

Double Pays $27.60

Polk had a hand in a $27.60 double pay-off when he won the opening race with the Calumet Farm's Bay Carse, a chesty son of Reigh Count. Belay, making it two victories in as many starts, completed the transaction.

Polk's second winner came aboard Phara Belle, a filly from the A. C. C. barn. She drove to the wire in front of Banner Girl, Cherachin and four others. He came back in the sixth race to score with Ann Mowlee. The favorite, Ann Mowlee, just bounced along to win by eight lengths.

Jack M. Brooks' Corum won his first race this year and his second in two years in the seventh race. Paying a $9 mutuel, the Crack Brigade gelding closed three lengths ahead of C. Boyle's Popo with Herbert Kerr's Nancy Mae third. The second and third positions were decided by the camera. Apprentice Polk, seeking his fourth winner on the program, had Happy Road close up throughout but was forced out of the pay circle right at the end.

BELAY, slow to begin and not hurried to stretch, swung out for racing room and wore down leaders under mild drive and won easily while opening a gap. GRIDIRON worked way to contention gradually and closed with good energy, but was no match for winner. HOOT TOOT was hard ridden while closest to ROSE BABY'S early pace, saved much ground entering stretch and held on stubbornly. GREEDAN, outrun for three furlongs, came gamely at end. Old Dominion Dog Show On Today

Alexandria Event Draws 750 Entries

Largest Number Of Dogs Ever Shown In Southern Event; Many Notable Entries

Blue bloods of dogdom will pass in review today at the Alexandria Ball Park, Alexandria, Va., when the Old Dominion Kennel Club Dog Show opens with the largest number of dogs ever entered in a Southern dog show, according to records of the Foley Dog Show organization.

It will be a bad day for cats in the vicinity, for 750 canines from almost all of the 107 breeds recognized by the American Kennel Club, governing body of purebred dogs in the United States, have been entered.

Champion will be pitted against champion, and some of the most famous show dogs in the country will be on exhibition. The show, openig at 10 a. m., will last throughout the day, with judging conducted in eight different rings. A cafeteria has been set up on the grounds in order to give families a chance to make a day of it.

Breeds new to this section—the Saluki, Afghan Hound, Apfenpinscher, Puli, Briard, Corgi—will be represented.

Highlight of the judging will be selection of the best-in show. Winners from the six classes—sporting, hound, working, terrier, toy and nonsporting—will poss in review before the judges at 4 p. m., and Dr. Charles J. McAnulty, of Atlantic City, N. J., will make the final selection.

Penn Relays

The defending champion team of Jack Watt, jr., Austin M. Kellam, Robert P. Ufter and H. Paxson Gifford broke its own meet record of 1933 by three-tenths of a second and clipped two-tenths of a second off the world mark with a 42.2 performance. The previous best time for the race was made in 1928 by Glendale High, of California.

Pittsburgh's well-balanced squad, which is defending three relay titles, won its first victory by nosing out Cornell in the college quarter-mile championship race. The Pitt quartet of Frank Ohl, Arthur Thomas, Lawrence Tregoning and Albert Ferrara finished in 42.2, or the same time as did Mercersburg. Close behind Cornell in third and fourth positions were Xavier, of New Orleans and the University of Michigan.

Columbia, defending champion, failed to qualify. The inability of Syracuse, anchored by Marty Glickman, of 1936 Olympic fame, and Villanova, Notre Dame, Pennsylvania and Virginia were surprising.

Virginia Boy Scores

Bespectacled Frank Fuller, one of the greatest hurdlers ever developed at the University of Virginia, posted the fast time of 14.5 to win the special invitation 120-yard high hurdles over a strong field. Hughes Cauffman, Pennsylvania, was second, and James Adam, a teammate, was a close third.

Fuller captured the third heat in 15.5, hardly presaging the excellent race he was to offer in the final.

Eddie Morgan, stocky Philadelphia boy, who anchored Overbrook to a record-breaking 7:41 race in the high school medley 1-mile relay championship last year, returned to the scene of his triumph in fitting style by leading Mercersburg's medley quartet to a stirring victory over Seton Hall, the defending champion.

Down in Front

With Richards Vidmer

Of course Barney McCoskey, Detroit's rookie outfielder, is setting the American League on fire with his steady hitting; Bob Feller is attracting his share of attention by winning two games and fanning 17 batters already; the Yankees are living up to their advance notices by jumping quickly into the league lead, and Hank Greenberg is back in the headlines when home runs are mentioned, but the real sensation of this building baseball season is that fellow McCaffrey.

VIDMER

The press box buzzes with his name. His past exploits are recalled in awed tones. His current feats of greatness are relayed along the line where reporters bend over their scirebooks and typewriters.

A telegraph instrument vlicks excitedly in the Yankee Stadium and a gleam of joy appears in a writer's eye.

"McCaffrey just hit another!" he will sing out, and everyone within hearing turns to stare, shakes his head in amazebent and, silently impressed, returns to his labors.

They tell of the time when McCaqrey played three weeks with a broken leg, stole 11 bases and finally revealed his injury only when the plaster cast he was werhad to have it patched by the ing cracked at the seams and he trainer.

They racall the time that he was playing in a night game and, with two on, the pitcher turned loose a fast ball toward the plate. Just as he let the ball go the lights went out. There was a sharp crack in the darkness. When the lights went up the ball was just dropping into the rightfield bleachers and McCaffrey was rounding third with the winning run.

And then someone will recall the time that McCaffrey was on third base when the squeeze play was ordered. He got a good lead and started home with the run that would tie the score. The batter stood poised, ready to bunt, when the ball neared the plate he suddenly heard McCaffrey's voice yelling.

"Hit it!"

So he swung and knocked the ball out of the park. As he started trotting toward first he looked up and there was McCaffrey dusting himself off. He had crossed the plate with the tying run before the ball got up to the batter and immediately realized that there was no call for a bunt with the tying run already home.

The boys in the press box will tell you, without much urging, how McCaffrey hit the longest home run on record. He banged the ball right into an airplane that was flying overhead on its way to a round-the-world flight, nonstop. And they shake their heads when someone always recalls how this record swat never was recognized as official because it was discovered that the pilot of the plane was McCaffrey's brother and that the whole thing was planned beforehand.

"But think of the accuracy of McCaffrey's hit," they say sadly. "At least he ought to get credit for that."

But, of course, a lot of McCaffrey's records aren't accepted by the statisticians for one reason or another. Like the year when he hit 75 home runs. That mark was thrown out because McCaffrey refused to play in any games on Sundays, Mondays and Tuesdays. It was pointed out that a batter must play in at least 100 contests in order to be accepted as the league-leading hitter and that the same rule should govern home run champions.

It is easy to understand why McCaffrey is so popular with the baseball writers. He has color and he is always doing most fantastic things. They do say that there's a youngster coming up in the National League named Jahnny Upjohn who is likely to steal a lot of McCaffrey's thunder, but the old, loyal McCaffrey followers in the press box maintain that Upjohn, the upstart, merely will spur old Mac on to greater deeds of valor.

So if you happen to be passing by the press box at the Yankee Stadium, the Polo Grounds, Ebbets field, Shibe Park, Wrigley Field or, in fact, any major league ball park, and you see a baseball writer suddenly look up from his chores, bean and sing out:

"McCaffrey hit one!"

Just keep moving along. McCaffrey is just one of the imaginative characters who help to relieve the monotony and pass dreary, rainy afternoons when the games are called off and baseball writers are threatened with acute and chronic nostalgia.

ing him home, very few gave ear to his story and those who did had smilingly incredulous expressions in their faces.

Our old man said he supposed he had a right to get good and sore over this attitude but, that after he had thought it over he realized that he had often received explanations of accusations himself in exactly the same manner. He said he had come to the conclusion that the reason most people were willing to listen to accusations was that they generally hoped they were true, and the reason they did not want to hear explanations was because they did not care to have that hope weakened.

Our old man said nobody was to blame for that situation. He said it was just human nature. He said he judged that accusations were more interesting than explanations.

He said he had noticed that when a fellow was arrested for murder or any other crime, the headlines in the newspapers were founded mainly on the accusations against the fellow and never on how he explained them, though his explanation might be the truth and subsequently substantiated in court.

Interesting Accusations

Our old man said the proof that accusations were more interesting than explanations was in the fact that the headlines kept dwindling along with public attention as the strength of the accusations waned, until finally the accused was pretty lucky if he got a few paragraphs announcing his absolution.

He said you could not blame the newspapers, either, because generally that was all the absolution was worth from the standpoint of reader interest, however important it might seem to the accused. Our old man said newspapers just reflected human nature, too.

He said that even when a fellow accused of something established his innocence beyond all shadow of a doubt, the memory of the accusation stuck in the public mind longer than the absolution, though that accusation might have been against a lifetime of righteousness.

Our old man said it had always struck him as strange that people would open their recollections of a once accused fellow with a statement of the accusation, and recall his absolution late in their story, and then with a suggestion of doubt that it was all right in their tone.

He claimed that this would be a better world if we had laws requiring an accusation of any kind to be preceded by the explanation of the accused, though he admitted that he did not see how that could be worked out. He said it was the fact that the accusation got in first that made it tough on the accused the same as the first punch in a fist fight.

Burden of Proof

Our old man said that he had often read that in the eyes of the law an accused fellow was supposed to be innocent until he had been proved guilty, but he had never noticed district attorneys getting up and saying to a jury, "This chap is charged with such and such, and here is what he says about it," then reciting the accused's explanation.

Our old man said the district attorneys just piled up the accusations without mentioning any possible explanations, except to say they were probably lies, and that way they got in the first punches. He said the burden of proof of a fellow's guilt was supposed to be on the district attorney, but that it had been his observation that it was the accused who wound up carrying the load.

He said he had served on juries in his time, and it had been his experience that the first angle they took up in the jury room was not the possible innocence of the accused, but his probable guilt. He said he thought most juries gave more attention to the accusations than to the explanations, though that was not supposed to be the theory of law or justice.

Our old man said the greatest fellow for handling accusations he ever knew was a public official back in our old home town of Pueblo. This official was not infrequently the victim of accusations of one kind and another bearing upon his private life and public conduct, and the instant he heard, or even sensed an accusation he ran right out and started bawling "Stop thief!" so to speak, at his accuser.

Our old man said that way the official generally had his accusers running so hard they could not stop for accusations.

Attention, Mr. Griffith! English Inject Vitamins Into Players

'Quick, Watson, the Needle,' Will Be Cry Today as Soccer Teams Meet for Title

By the Associated Press.

London, April 28.—Britons, who get only mildly aroused over Hitler and Mussolini, have been making "pub" life unbearable this week with arguments over "to inject or not to inject" players in tomorrow's English football cup final, the British equivalent of the World Series.

Portsmouth and Wolverhampton meet for the championship in the biggest game of the year, but that's only half the story. The other half is the season-long injections of "vitamins" gland stimulants of secret formula to players on both teams.

English, Scotch and Welsh like their sports straight. There was a vast outcry when the lagging players first turned to trainers and bellowed "quick, Watson, the needle." According to the diehards this was the end of the empire and the fall of London. Most of them couldn't see why professional football players, who are paid a handsome wage by British athletic standards, should need strengthening for their profession.

Only three teams in the league used the treatment. Two of them are in the cup final, which is considered a victory for "injectors," but the "noninjectors" point out all teams would use the treatments if they really were worth anything.

The cooler heads are willing to bet that the injections will have no more effect than the usual stimulation taken between periods during any game.

The papers are full of details of "battle of glands." Walverhampton will be at full strength, but this is at the risk of further medical preparation. Burton, right winger, and Gardiner, left half, will return to the game fully injected and bathed in soda and brine. The chances are the house surgeon at Barts Hospital will referee and the chemist will carry out the water bucket.

The British, as usual, are reluctant to guess the size of the crowd, but it is safe that 100,000 or better will be on hand. Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy will be in the royal box and there is a chance the King may attend.

Two Taxes Due On Intangibles In Montgomery

Allen Reports Both New and Old Levies Will Be Required

Montgomery County Bureau of The Post, 9213 Clark Avenue, Silver Spring, Md. Telephone: SHepherd 4200.

Rockville.—An apparent oversight on the part of authors of Maryland's new revenue act will require Montgomery County owners of securities to pay taxes twice this year on their securities holdings, according to word received yesterday by Wilton T. Allen, county supervisor of assessments.

Allen said he had received a letter from Michael J. Lindsay, chief supervisor of assessments of Maryland, that the old tax of 45 cents per $100 value on intangible property must be reported as in former years before June 1. At the same time, Lindsay is reported by Allen to have said, county residents will be liable for the 2½ per cent tax on earned income and 6 per cent on unearned income under the new State law which goes into effect June 1.

The net result of this ruling, Allen pointed out, is that county residents must meet the requirements of the old law by filing a report on their holdings before June 1, and then comply with the new law by reporting on their holdings after June 1. The intangible tax is due September 1 and a penalty is added after October 1, while the new tax will cover the calendar year 1939 and be payable before March 15, 1940. Each taxpayer will, accordingly, pay a tax twice.

The double tax is necessary, according to Lindsay's letter, by a clause in the new revenue act which stipulates that nothing in the law shall interfere with the collection of taxes due in 1939. Montgomery County now has approximately $22,000,000 in taxable intangible property on which to levy, Allen reported to the county commissioners last week.

Sen. Taft Lauds Life Insurance As Savings Force

Philadelphia, April 28.—"Life insurance is the greatest savings institution in the world. Even in the midst of a period dominated by the spending philosophy, the owners of life insurance policies have saved a billion and a half dollars a year," said United States Senator Robert A. Taft, of Ohio, in addressing a special meeting of the Philadelphia Association of Life Underwriters yesterday to open the fiftieth anniversary celebration of the National Association of Life Underwriters.

The address, which was broadcast, was supplemented by an electrical transcription that was heard by the membership of some 150 local associations throughout the United States, meeting simultaneously with the Philadelphia luncheon, of which the D. C. Life Underwriters Association was one.

Talking on "Life Insurance—the American Way," Senator Taft dealt primarily with the institution of life insurance, the part it plays in the lives of American citizens, and the work of the life insuranceagent in work of the life insurance agent in bringing it to the public.

"Life insurance provides the best means of extending a private form of social security," said Senator Taft. "A system in which men voluntarily provide for their old age and their families is the American ideal. You have helped 64,000,000 free Americans attain this ideal by giving them a convenient method of saving and an incentive to work in order to save," he told the underwriters.

Union Pacific R. R. Wins Back Traffic Lost to Trucks

Omaha, Nebr., April 28 (AP).—William M. Jeffers, president of the Union Pacific Railroad, today told the road's directors—meeting outside New York City for the first time in history—the road's new merchandising service "is resulting in the return of much traffic to the rails which had been lost to trucks."

The service, designed for less than carload shipments, operates out of Omaha, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City, Portland and Los Angeles, Jeffers said, making it possible to provide next morning delivery at many important points and second morning delivery to distant points.

Jeffers announced he received a telegram today from D. D. Fennell, president of the National Safety Council, saying the Union Pacific, for the twentieth consecutive year, won first place in 1938 as the safest operating railroad in America.

The directors met in connection with Omaha's "golden spike days" celebration.

Missouri Pacific Buys Two 90-Mile Streamline Trains

New York, April 28.—Two new streamlined aluminum trains have been ordered by the Missouri Pacific Railroad for fall delivery to provide a high-speed passenger service between St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha, the Aluminum Co. of America announced here today.

Capable of a 90-mile-an-hour speed and scheduled to maintain nearly a mile-a-minute average for the run, including stops, the Missouri Pacific lightweight twin flyers will bring the Nation's total of streamlined aluminum trains to an even dozen, not counting trains built mainly of other materials, but having aluminum applications throughout.

The trains will be built at the St. Charles, Mo., plant of the American Car and Foundry Co. Each will be supplied by a 2,000-horsepower Diesel electric locomotive ordered from the Electromotive Corporation, La Grange, Ill.

Gulf Oil Refunds $75,000,000 of Its Obligations

New York, April 28 (AP).—Gulf Oil Co., taking advantage of "low interest rates prevailing in the money market," last December made arrangements to refund all of its funded and long-term debt through private sale of new debentures and ten-year bank loans, the company's annual report disclosed today.

The company retired $20,000,000 of 15-year 4 per cent sinking fund debentures, due 1950, and $20,000,000 of 15-year 4½ per cent debentures, due 1949, as well as around $32,000,000 long-term notes and certain short-term obligations issued in 1938.

The retirements were accomplished by private sale of two 15-year debenture issues of $25,000,000 each, due 1953, and bearing 2¾ per cent interest, and through 10-year loans from banks of around $25,000,000 in 2¾ per cent installment notes.

Too Much Gasoline, Oil President Says

Chicago, April 28 (AP).—President Edward G. Seubert of the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana said, "there is too much gasoline on hand" in analyzing the unsettled retail price situation today at a press conference preceding the annual stockholders' meeting in Whiting, Ind.

"The price situation is very bad," he declared. "All the major companies show a sharp decline in income due to tough competition." One of the causes, he said, was increased production of crude oil in which the southern Illinois fields were a factor. Seubert said his company always had stood for proration and that unless the Illinois legislature took such action he looked for even higher production.

Stock Exchange Firm May Refund Panama's Debt

Panama City, April 28 (AP).—Reliable sources said today the government of Panama has decided to commission the New York Stock Exchange firm of Hornblower & Weeks to arrange a refunding of the nation's $18,500,000 external debt, owed principally to investors in the United States.

The method would be through the issuance of new bonds bearing a lower rate of interest than those outstanding—the principal issues are 5s and 5½s of which the 5s are in default—and the retirement of the present issues.

At present, Panama devotes the proceeds of the Panama Canal rental plus the product of the so-called constitutional fund invested in New York real estate for servicing the debt.

The projected refunding would be designed to prevent Panama from having to divert funds from local administrative activities to remit to creditors in the United States as has occurred in recent years as a result of difficulties over payment of the canal rental. Panama has insisted the United States should pay the $250,000 rental in gold dollars of the 1903 standard or its equivalent in 1939 depreciated dollars.

New York, April 28 (AP).—Hornblower & Weeks declined to comment on the report that the government of Panama had decided to let it handle a debt refunding operation. It was learned, however, that the firm has been negotiating with Panama.

Diamond Offered To Amateur Teams

Independent and league amateur teams of the District area yesterday were invited to make free use of the baseball diamond of The Boys Republic stadium in Arlington, Va., by Arthur M. Chamberlin, athletic director.

Permits for teams to practice on the field, formerly Ballston stadium, Wilson boulevard and Randolph street, will be issued by Chamberlain from The Boys' Republic, 1121 North Irving street, Arlington, to prevent confusion over use of the diamond.

Now undergoing extensive improvements, the field is to be enlarge and recreational halls, a stage, boxing rings, gymnasium facilities and reading and assembly rooms are to be constructed, Chamberlain said. The diamond is being rolled and graded.

Herndon A. C. in Action

The newly organized Herndon Athletic Club baseball team, making its first start in the Tri-County Baseball League, will meet Ballston tomorrow in the league opener.

C. U. Banquet Slated on May 7

Speculation as to who will receive the coveted Harris Cup for the outstanding student, athlete and gentleman at Catholic University will feature the sixth renewal of the Cardinals' annual athletic banquet on Sunday, May 7. Candidates from every branch of sport will attend the dinner at the Shoreham, but only one will step up for the cherished cup.

One of the most likely prospects will be Fred Stant, the junior student who brought to Coach Eddie Lafond's boxing team the middleweight championship in the intercollegiate tournament at Madison, Wis. Whether he receives the Harris Cup or not, Stant will be awarded a trophy emplematic of his title.

Numerous sports as well as civic greats have already accepted invitations to the dinner. Judge Edward M. Curran will be the toastmaster, while Frank Murray, head coach at Virginia U., will be the principal speaker. Other important guests will be J. Edgar Hoover; J. Sefton Darr, president of the D. C. Bar Association; Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary president og Georgetown University; Ambrose O'Connell, assistant Postmaster General; and George Marshall, Washington Redskins owner.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Notes on the tournament (the Vanderbilt Cup championship):

The Marcus four, with Mrs. H. E. Latter, E. N. Marcus, of Boston, Richard Skinner, of Chestnut Hill, Mass., and Jack Cushing, of New York, who have been the sensation of the tournament, nearly didn't enter the event at all. On Sunday Mrs. Latter felt so poorly she begged to be excused from playing. Mr. Marcus persuaded her to come anyway, saying, "We'll see how you feel when you get here."

Capt. Alfred M. Gruenther, U. S. A., of the War College, Washington, who is directing the tournament, has received orders to join the Second Division of the regular army at San Antonio. He will be missed by bridge players who have appreciated his efficient direction of tournaments and his glowing personality.

On one of the hands in the match played between the Vanderbilt team and the Regency Club group led by Walter Salmon, jr., Baron von Zedtwitz, of the skipper's team put in a psychic which failed to stop a slam, but directed it to a lower declaration. William Bennett and Daly Highlyman, teammates of Salmon, held the North South cards.

A. Mitchell Barnes, the Baron's partner for the match, opened the king of hearts and Bennett claimed seven, throwing off his losing club on the heart ace.

Provided the same opening lead was made, Bennett and Highlyman would have made 170 points more had they bid the slam at spades.

At first, Barnes and the Baron believed that they should have saved at seven clubs, but closer inspection of the cards revealed that they would be set 1,400 at that contract, less the hundred honors, which would hardly be a save at all against the 1,390 points the adversaries scored for the diamond slam.

Against seven clubs, two spades, a diamond, a heart and a heart ruff, or five tricks, can be won.

Internal Revenue Loge 47, A. F. G. E., holds a dance in the Continental Room of the Wardman Park Hotel next Thursday night. This is the largest A. F. G. E. lodge in the United States and a big turnout is expected . . . Keldroy P. Aldrich, chief Post Office Inspector and dean of that branch of the service, will be honored with a banquet and dance at Hotel 2400 Tuesday night. The event, sponsored by the inspectors in honor of Aldrich's length of service, is expected to be well attended by the department employes. On the committee of arrangements are: H. R. Sanderson, Miss Verdie Hyman, George C. Smith, D. S. Ballard, J. E. Effer, Miss Alice C. Watts, Mrs. D. A. Breen, William Sargent, Mrs. M. E. Houchon, V. Porch and J. A. Benda . . . N. F. F. E. Treasury Local 262 will sponsor an informal complimentary dinner for its officers and collectors at 6:15 p. m. Thursday in a local restaurant . . . Donald Montgomery, director of Consumer's Counsel, will speak on "The Farmer Goes to Town," at 4:40 p. m. Monday in the Agriculture Department auditorium. Dr. W. W. Stockberger, special adviser to the Secretary of Agriculture and expert on personnel problems, makes himself felt in the current issue of the Agriculture Exchange, as follows: "Civil servants may well ponder the disrespect for the Government service which exists in the minds of many citizens. This attitude of the public is clearly expressed in an article entitled 'The Uncivil Civil Servant,' which not long since appeared in a leading magazine. The cause of this attitude as well as the remedy lies within the body of civil servants themselves. Civil servants should fully realize that they are responsible to their employer, the public, and that the time has long since passed when valid alibis can be produced for the failure of public servants to gain public approbation."

The Men's Tennis Association of the Agriculture Department will hold a practice session at 2 p. m. today on the Potomac Park Courts. Players to represented the department in the league matches will be chosen according to the showing made in the practice sessions. In event of rain, the practice sessions will be held the following Saturday at the same time and place.

The annual dinner dance sponsored by the Ladies Bowling League, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, will be held tonight at Hotel 2400. Prizes for the season will be distributed. The Bureau director, Alvin Hall, will be toastmaster. An attendance of 250 is anticipated. At the speakers' table will be Mr. and Mrs. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Clark R. Long, Mr. and Mrs. Beryl English, Mr. and Mrs. George Duncan, Mr. and Mrs. John Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Litzler, Gus Radue, Henry Nolde, Edward White, George Herndon, O. Veihmeyer, J. Bob Burns Says—

I can remember way back when it use'ta be the doctor's little black bag that was always full of mysterious remedies. And I remember how the folks use'ta line up for blocks down at the postoffice on the first day of January, waitin' for the medicine almanacs. But the radio has spoiled all that fun.

The last time I went home my Aunt Boo was sittin' in front of a radio just as fidgety as she could be, waitin' for the commercial announcement to come on.

She says, "Robin, I been sittin' here for over an hour—I've sat through two operatic concerts; three black-face comedy teams; and a jam session, and I'm still waitin' to hear how to cure my dandruff."

Her Majesty the Queen:

Elizabeth, Patroness of Art, Active In London Slum Clearance Work

As Duchess of York, Elizabeth attended the centenary celebration of King's College. She is shown here with the Archbishop of Canterbury, who welcomed her

By Lady Cynthia Asquith.

CHAPTER XVIII

One of the most interesting and admirable enterprises with which Queen Elizabeth is intimately concerned is the St. Marylebone Association, a gallant attack leveled against the standing disgrace of the London slums. The appalling problems presented by the slums have only recently aroused the painful interest long their due. For ages they were accepted as a necessary evil, one that seldom disturbed the mind of the comfortably housed.

To turn from the grim realities of slums to the solace of art, I'm sure that the Duchess' connection with the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art must be one of her most pleasant duties; it might almost be described as a holiday task.

On November 17, 1931, she came with the Duke of York to open the academy's beautiful new buildings, and after greatly enjoying the students' performance she was persuaded to deliver an impromptu speech from the stage of the theater, and in so doing proved that she, at least, needed no instruction in elocution. She then made a tour of the premises and was personally introduced to each of the students.

Shortly after this opening ceremony the duchess was invited to be patroness and her consent assured her continued interest in the students.

With Needlework School

Another school of art with which Queen Elizabeth has for a long time been intimately associated is the Royal School of Art Needlework. This admirable institution was founded in 1872 by H. R. H. Princess Christian with the double object of reviving a languishing art and providing paid employment for educated women who would otherwise be obliged to live in poverty. The school has been a great success and in now entirely self-supporting.

Unquestionably the most picturesque episode in Queen Elizabeth's public career as Duchess of York was when, in 1929, for a whole fortnight, her husband and she held court at Holyrood during his appointment as the King's Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

This was the first General Assembly attended by any member of the royal family since James VI of Scotland became James I of England and went to live in London.

Many Sightseers

For the greater part of the year the palace of Holyrood-house (to give the famous residence of the Scottish Kings its full name) lies undisturbed in the midst of the beautiful city of Edinburgh. Abandoned to ghosts and caretakers by night, during the day it suffers partial invasion from sightseers who come to peer at the bed of Mary, Queen of Scots, at the stain of Rizzio's blood on the floor and at the long gallery with its portraits of Scotland's Kings—the gallery in which Prince Charlie held his revels during his brief military occupation of Edinburgh.

Undisturbed by these intrusions, the grim castle appears consecrated to its savage history. Grimly repudiating the present, its great gray bulk seems forever brooding over the past.

Once, however, in each year it stirs in its sleep and some of its ancient splendor is revived to pay allegiance to the passing moment. This is when His Grace, the Lord High Commissioner, comes into residence. Once more bugles blow, guards are set, bagpipes wail and crowds thicken to see Their Graces with their clattering escort drive up the royal mile to the assembly hall, or the long line of carriages bringing those who attend the Commissioner's levee. Far into the night the crowds stand to watch the brilliant lighting of the windows of the reawakened palace and to hear the strains of music float across the excited city.

Romantic Setting

As Duke of York the new King was the first member of the royal family to hold this office since 1600.

From childhood Queen Elizabeth had been steeped in the stormy history of her country, and it was with an almost overpowering sense of romance that she entered the palace that had staged so much of its picturesque violence. From evening of Saturday, May 18, when the royal standard ran up to the top of the flagstaff on the rugged palace and there was a shout of "They've come!" until her departure ten long days later, she remained under the spell of this romance. Thick and heavy with glamor, the atmosphere enwrapped her as with a heavy cloak. Like some hauntingly sad and lovely tune that cannot be dismissed, the thought of Mary, Queen of Scots, kept drifting into her heart and mind, and when she woke for the first time to her unbelievably glamorous surroundings, it was to wonder into which century she had been wafted by her dreams. But, however much her imagination strayed into the past, the claims of the present were many and urgent. With smiling zest the duke and duchess responded to these claims, and if they were ever tired or preoccupied no signs of it were shown.

Though the duchess' ten days' Queenship at Holyrood must rank as the most picturesque of the roles she has played since her return from Australia, there are others worth recording, for instance, when in October, 1931, she visited Oxford to open a new department in the infirmary, the university conferred upon her the degree of Doctor of Civil Law by Diploma.

2 Universities To Name Chief Of Gallinger

New Agreement Gives Schools More Control Of City Hospital

Appointment in the near future of a full time chief of staff for Gallinger Hospital, to be recommended and paid by the medical schools of George Washington and Georgetown Universities, last night was announced by the District Commissioners as part of a new settlement in the controversy between Health Officer George Ruhland and the universities.

The agreement, signed yesterday, described as an amendment to the contract of March 9 between the Commissioners and universities, was hailed by Commissioner David McCoach, jr., as the foundation for "efficient and economical operation" of the hospital.

Greater Degree of Authority

With the new arrangement giving the two medical schools a greater degree of authority over Gallinger than at any time during Dr. Ruhland's regime at the Health Department, McCoach warned that the Commissioners "fully expect all concerned to carry out the intent of this agreement." The Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary, president of Georgetown, issued a statement welcoming the understanding.

No candidates for the post of chief medical officer have yet been considered, Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin, president tof George Washington, stated.

Meanwhile indications that the Gallinger dispute is not closed were reported after informal discussion of the municipal hospital by the Senate subcommittee on District affairs. A move for complete investigation of the Gallinger situation was expected at the committee's next meeting.

Physicians Become Professors

Yesterday's agreement provides for appointment of the five resident physicians to the faculties of Georgetown and George Washington, though their teaching duties are confined to Gallinger and their salaries paid by the District Health Department.

Heads of the five departments at Gallinger will remain volunteer doctors from the medical schools, supervising both the five resident physicians and about 120 visiting doctors.

An executive committee, composed of Dr. Edgar A. Bocock, superintendent of the hospital, the chief of staff, superintendent of nurses and five department heads will prepare nominations for the staff and "consider any matters having to do with the professional examination, diagnosis and treatment of patients admitted to the hospital."

Physicists Here Debate Whether Experiment Will Blow Up 2 Miles of the Landscape

embers of the American Physical Society, meeting at the Bureau of Standards yesterday, discussed the possibility of one of their experiments blowing a hole in the landscape two miles across.

Argument as to the likelihood of such an explosion was aroused by a seemingly simplee fact. It was that Dr. Neils Bohr, who is a colleague of Dr. Albert Einstein at the Institutee for Advanced Study at Princeton, had broken the nucleus of the uranium atom into two almost equal parts. Heretofore disintegration of atoms has broken off relatively small portions of the main mass.

Dr. Bohr, a Nobel prize winner, and Dr. John A. Wheeler of Princeton, told of the mechanics of dividing the uranium nucleus yesterday morning. Their comments were accompanied by reports by physicists at Columbia University who have observed some of the phenomena of the divided atom. They were Drs. G. N. Glasoe and J. Steeigman, who told of radioactivity in the separated parts, and Drs. E. T. Booth, J. R. Dunning and F. G. Slack, who reported on the distribution of energy effected.

Explosive nature of the process was indicated when Dr. Bohr said that "only a few million volts" were used in separating the nuclei of either uranium or thorium. But h eindicated that such separation might then occur in a series of uranium nuclei.

"If a mass of uranium isotopes, say a yard in diameter, could be caused to explode by one explosion setting off others, then something would happen," commented Dr. W. H. Furry, of Harvard. "It is all eyewash that such an explosion would set off different atoms, and literally blow up the world, as some have suggested. But it would tear a very large hole in the landscape.

"So far that kind of explosion has been found onl yin the stars. It is what provides their heat. I think it is unlikely to occur on the earth.

"In the first place," he explained, "it would require the concentration in one mass of a lot of isotopes of uranium, which means huge quantities of something extremely rare and hard to obtain.

"In order to distintegrate one atom," he said further, "you have to his it dead center of the nucleus. This means hittting something that is about one one-hundred millionth part of the atom, so that all but one in a million neutrons—the bombarding particles—go through and don't hit. There is only about one one-thousand millionth, or one million-millionth atom ever has anything happen to it.

"So that," he concluded, "while you might use uranium to blow up several square miles of landscape, it doesn't seem likely to happen."

Other scientists admitted that such an event was improbable, but said facts adduced by Dr. Bohr indicated it was possible.
